How Jaws Are Broken and Ankles Crushed—Graphic Description of the Slicing Process—A Talk With a Chinese Executioner

[Copyrighted 1889 by Frank G. Carpenter.]

CANTON, China, Jan 27, 1889.—[Special Correspondence.]—Horrible! Horrible! Horrible!! Are the cruelties of Chinese justice! I grew sick while watching the torture of a witness at the courts here in Canton to-day and I had to leave the place for fear I should faint away. The man was brought into the court in a basket. His arms were chained behind him. His feet were manacled so that the heavy iron had cut through the skin and there was a chain also about his neck. He had refused to testify and had been tortured before until he was now pale and sick. He was thrown from the basket on to the floor in front of a tall Mandarin judge dressed in a long silk gown and wearing a round black cap with a button on the crown. The irons were taken off and the man was forced into a kneeling posture on the stone floor. He pleaded that he was sick, that he knew nothing and he begged they would not punish him further. The judge said a word and three burly Chinamen grasped him. They carried him to the side of the court where a bench about four feet long and a foot wide was lying. They put this bench on end against a pillar and then taking the prisoner forced him down upon his knees before it so that the board of the bench rested against his back and between his shoulders. He was bare footed. They pulled his wide pantaloons up to his thighs and bending up his legs tied his big toes to the top legs of the bench so that the bare skin of his knees rested on the stones. The bench extended some distance above the back of his head and near the end a hole had been bored about an inch in diameter. Through this his queue was pulled, forcing his head tight against the board and stretching his neck so that the cords stood out like whips. His arms were twisted behind the bench, stretched backward and upwards and held there by strings tied to the thumbs. A heavy sharp chain with iron links about two inches wide was then brought and put under his bare knees. He was to be kept with his whole weight resting on this chain and held up by his thumbs, his big toes and his queue until he confessed. The torture was terrible. His eyes almost started from their sockets, his face twitched and his moaning made me sick.

Among the other tortures I witnessed was the pounding a man's cheek with a leather clapper until the blood oozed from his mouth. This clapper was made of two pieces of leather of the thickness and twice the width of a harness tug fastened to a third piece of leather as a handle. The whole affair was not more than a foot long but it is more brutal than if it was made of iron. It is used largely in the punishment of women and it not infrequently breaks the jaws and knocks out the teeth. This prisoner was suspected of being engaged in smuggling opium and he denied being guilty. He was whipped thus on the jaws and then bambooed. The bambooing was done by taking down his trousers and laying him flat upon his belly on the floor of the court while a turnkey raising a bamboo club brought it down with all his force again and again upon the backs of the bare yellow thighs of the offender. This bamboo was split down the middle like a tuning fork. It whistled as it flew through the air and it clapped the skin with the noise of a pistol shot. The bare-armed jailer counted each blow. The long queued silk gowned sore-eyed judge looked complacently on and I saw no signs of pity in the stolid faces of the crowd.

Let me give you a picture of this Chinese court room. It is one of many in Canton and the largest. We passed through room after room and aisle after aisle of low narrow buildings to get to it. There was a court in front of it and around this in narrow cells sat the clerks and employes of the judge. The room was open at the front, paved with stone and it had only a table and a chair or two. There are no lawyers in China and the judge has unlimited power provided he does not transgress the code. China has a code of laws hundreds of years old, of which a new edition is published every five years, and in which the penalties for the minutest crimes are regulated. It is fuller of more horrible sentences than the Newgate calendar, and the judges of China have more power in the examining of witnesses than the most brutal of tyrants. There is no jury and the court room is as bare as a barn. Just behind where I stood were a number of the implements of torture ready for use and all showing the marks of wear and tear. One which my guide said was very bad was made of a bar of wood six feet long supported by two upright wooden pillars. The prisoner was made to kneel under this with the back of his neck touching the bar and his arms stretched out along it. These are tied by cords to the bar, and as he kneels with his bare knees upon the chain, such as I saw a few moments later for the obdurate witness, a third bar is placed across the legs back of the knees and two men stand upon it, thus forcing the flesh into the chains. The ankles are sometimes crushed by a similar bar placed across them.

Chinese invention which gave its people sugar centuries before it tickled the palates of other mortals, which brought gunpowder into the world and which invented printing, seems to have dropped long ago the useful arts and devoted itself to the torture of its criminals. I believe that the Chinese heart is naturally cruel and in looking over the Pekin Gazette I see that the tortures of the middle age are common here and that now and then a judge astonishes even the Chinamen themselves by the refinement of his punishments. Instances are given where the fingers are wrapped in oiled rags and burnt, and one magistrate some time ago fastened two criminals to boards by nails driven through their palms. Compelling men to kneel on pounded glass is noted, and this kneeling on chains with links as sharp as knives is common. Williams tells of a magistrate who put a man into a coffin and kept him there until he was suffocated, and [illegible] gives the instance of a judge who used boiling oil, boiling water and red hot spikes in his cruelties. At Shanghai I was shown a wooden cage between five and six feet high, just high enough to enclose the body of a man. It was made with four posts and a thick board set into the top. This board was made of two pieces so arranged that it could be taken out and a man's neck be enclosed in the hole in its center. At the bottom it had cross bars several inches above the ground and the top was so graduated that the man enclosed within it must stand upon his toes. His hands were tied and this torture is terrible. In some instances men are left to starve to death in such cages and this cage had contained a prisoner only a few days before. It had a piece of straw matting stretched over the top of it which the wife of the last criminal had put there to protect his bare head from the rays of the sun.

At Canton, just outside this court room, I saw a great stack of cangues ready for use, and the wearing of these is a common punishment in China. The weight of the cangue is increased with the offense and the cangue is a square piece of board so knocked together around a hole in the center that a man's neck can just fit into it. It is about four feet square and some of those which I looked at were so heavy that I could not lift them. One weighed ninety pounds and great bars of iron were set into it to increase the weight of the wood. The name of the offender and his punishment is pasted on the boards and there is one species of cangue made in the shape of a barrel. The prisoner is put inside, with his head fitting through a hole in the top and his hands, fastened with chains, come through the sides. He cannot move and he has to be fed.

At the Shanghai prison I saw cages which looked as though they might have been pens for the carrying of hogs to a county fair. These were so low that a man could not sit up in them, and it is in these that criminals are often carried to execution. These had been used the day before for the caging of criminals and I took a look at the prisoners who had been taken from them to the jail. I wanted to go through this prison, but I was told that if I did so I would probably have my clothes torn from me by the prisoners, as they were a bad lot and had killed their jailor a few days before. I looked through a hole in the door and saw the most brutal faces I have as yet seen in China. The men were chained to the wall like wild beasts and some of them had chains about their necks as well as their feet. The smell was horrible and the Chinese prison is by no means a sanitary institution. Each prison has its dead house connected with it and deaths from semi starvation and torture are not uncommon. The jailers make a large part of their salary by squeezing, and money will do as much and more for the criminal in China than it will in America. Judges sometimes pay $5,000 and $10,000 for their appointments and he is a poor money maker who does not get rich during his term. The Taotai of Shanghai gets a salary of about $1000 and his office is estimated to be worth more than $100,000 a year. The commissioner of customs at Tientsin nominally receives a salary of about the same size but I am told that he makes about $200,000 a year and his profits all come from bribes or squeezes.

Three coolies carried me in a chair from the court in Canton to the execution ground and I had a chat with the executioner. He was a nasty, dirty, blood thirsty looking fellow with hair an inch long standing out like bristles over the front of his head and about his queue. He had not been busy for several days and he took delight in explaining to me the uses of the heavy sword and the scientific cuts which he made with it. This sword was about four feet long. It has a blade as sharp as a razor and it is about a quarter of an inch thick at the back and more than two inches wide. He used both hands in swinging it about and he told me that my neck would be an easy one to slice off but that he would not like to have to cut up my thin frame by the slicing process. This execution ground of Canton is used as a crockery factory and the making of pots goes on when executions are not in progress. It is a narrow court between two high walls on the banks of the Canton river and the heads are cut off in the open air. Upon my asking what was done with the heads of the criminals, he told me through my interpreter that they were often thrown into jars of quick lime and that he would take one out and show me for the sum of 10 cents. In the interest of your paper I subscribed this amount and he pulled out a half-eaten skull by the pigtail and showed its ghastly ugliness to me. There were about a dozen of these earthen jars at the back of this execution ground. They were of the size of a twenty gallon keg and were covered with paper. They were full of heads and probably represented a year's execution.

At the back of this execution ground stood half a dozen wooden crosses. If you will take a piece of telegraph pole eight feet long and set a similar pole five feet long into it at right angles two feet from the top you will have the Chinese cross. It is upon these crosses that the criminals are bound when they are to undergo the punishment of Ling Chi or slicing to death, which is the sentence for all who murder a brother, a parent, a teacher, a husband or an uncle. The criminal is stripped and his feet are raised upon a brick or a stone. His queue is tied up to the cross and his arms are stretched out upon its arms. A British naval officer whom I met at Hong Kong, described an execution of this kind which he witnessed a few weeks ago.

"It made me feel very green at first," said he, "but after it was begun I could not keep my eyes off it. I have had the experience over again three times in my dreams and I would not want to see it again. I had the best guide in Canton and we saw the execution from the roof of one of the buildings beside the execution ground. There were two criminals and it took about thirty minutes to cut each of them to pieces. The first cuts sliced off the cheeks and the second the eye brows. After these a man held a fan before the faces of the prisoners and all we could see of them was the blood running down upon their bodies. The next cut was of the flesh between the hand and the elbow and the arteries were first bound above the places cut so that the man would not bleed to death before the ceremony was completed. Then the shoulders were cut off. Then the flesh of the thighs and after this the calves of the legs. The seventeenth and eighteenth cuts removed the hands, and the last cut took the head from the body. In both cases the men did not faint away. The pain was too terrible. They could not cry out as they were gagged and their writhings were horrible."

Mr Cheshire, the Chinese secretary of our legation at Pekin and one of the ablest of our representatives in China, pursued his studies of the Chinese language in Chinese clothes, living in a Chinese house and wearing a queue. He went into all parts of the Chinese cities and into the most out of the way places. He described to me two executions which he witnessed—one by strangulation and the other by decapitation. "The Chinese," said he, "prefer to be strangled rather than to have their heads cut off. The man who is beheaded can only come to earth again to fill the office of executioner and this is the vilest of Chinese occupations. Strangling is a respectable method of taking off. It is inflicted on kidnapers and on all thieves who steal articles of more than $500 in value. The prisoner is fastened to a cross and a strong piece of twine is tied around his neck and fastened at the upper part of the perpendicular bar. Such deaths are slow, and another method is twisting the cord until the man dies. The agony I cannot describe, but I shall never forget the strangled man's face."

"The man I saw decapitated," continued Mr Cheshire, "was forced to kneel. His hands were tied behind him, throwing his neck to the front, and the assistant of the executioner pulled the head further out by holding on to the man's queue. One blow of the sword severed the neck and the executioner ran with the head to the magistrate. At this execution half a dozen prisoners were brought to the execution ground but only one of them was beheaded, the sentence of the other being commuted at the last moment. Before the execution took place I walked among the prisoners smoking. One of the prisoners asked me for a cigar and I gave it to him. He lighted it and smoked it with gusto. It was this very man who was picked out of the half dozen to have his head cut off. Curious, wasn't it?"

I might fill another column with the stories I have heard of Chinese punishments and crime. The bamboo, which grows to the height of fifty feet and upward, gets its entire growth in a few weeks. I have heard of prisoners being tied over plants and of these growing through them. For certain offences prisoners are buried up to their necks and those who go by them are expected to add a clod to the pile. They do not, I am told, hesitate to do this, and this Chinese civilization founded upon Buddhism, Confucianism and so called literary culture is productive of such men and such scenes. Do you wonder that there is room for missionaries?

I don't. FRANK G CARPENTER.

Mother Earth Yields Up Her Secret to Edison and He Serves a Lunch to Rabelais

When Captain Boyton advertised his exhibition to take place down the river I got the idea into my head that he was trying to prevent people seeing him without paying and would therefore go up the river. I mentioned this to a friend who knows everything before it happens and he with a wink proposed that we drive out to the White house, Boyton or no Boyton. We did the same. The aquatic captain went down the river but we enjoyed our visit and made a most startling discovery, repaying me a thousand times more than all the Boytons put together. While sitting on the portico or piazza I noticed a man of about my own age walking nervously to and fro, his eyes intent upon the floor. Occasionally he would stop and look puzzled and then bringing his hand around in a sweeping gesture would smile and resume his walk at a quickened pace. I felt I had seen the face before but could not place it. I stepped inside and asked Smith who the man was. "I don't know. He came here three days ago with two younger men who were out here about a year since and stopped here a week or more." "Well what is he doing here, just staying?" "Oh, no. He goes off up the track towards Oswego every morning. Comes back about this time for his mail, stays a while, never says a word, is very deaf." At the word deaf I started but did not interrupt Smith, who went on without noticing my movement. "Not shamming either, for I noticed that the man who brings his mail has to yell in his ears every time he forgets his ear trumpet." I had heard enough as to who the man was, for I do not forget faces in the short space of ten years, but I wanted to know what he was doing here. "Don't you know where he goes, what he is doing? Can't you guess? Have you no idea?" "No sir," replied Smith, as he turned away to wait upon some of the Driving Association patrons. Returning to the piazza I found the man was gone. Hastily stepping around the edge of the Hotel and looking in the direction Smith had mentioned, I saw the man with bowed head and slow step crossing the race track. I don't know what moved me; it was more than curiosity. It was an impulse I could not resist and before I could appeal to etiquette I was through the gate and after the slowly receding figure. It was useless to call out after him. He was very deaf. I must overtake him. Reaching the brush he disappeared and fearing I might lose him, I quickened my step and was soon within twenty yards of him. I have no idea what restrained me. First I thought I'd step up to him and express my surprise at meeting him out here, then that struck me as not the right thing. Then I thought I'd make a detour and really meet him, go through the surprise business and let him go. That seemed all right, but somehow I felt I must almost sneak along after him and find out what he was doing in Oregon, whether it was proper or not. I felt guilty, but—suddenly in the thickest of the wood a little house with one window in the roof loomed up, and before I had recovered from surprise the man had entered. I hesitated a moment. If it were not he. Or if it was? Yet I kept moving. I knocked at the door. I heard voices inside. The door opened and the man I had followed extended his hand. "Come in, Rabelais, come in. An hour ago I could not have seen you, but now it's all right. How did you know me?" I said something, I don't know what in reply, then added, "Why, what in the world are you doing here, Ed—" "Oh, you don't recollect my name," he interrupted, clapping a shell phenoplex upon his ear. "It is Edymion, you understand?" and he squeezed my arm suggestively. "Well," he continued, "I have accomplished my purpose within the hour. Every hypothesis has been sustained and the immutability of nature's laws has received new proofs." While he was talking I looked about the room. It was a work shop with lathes, anvils, pans, boilers, chemicals, bottles, wires, dynamos, telephones, phonographs, and wires littered and stretched about. Two young men were at work, one apparently packing up, the other—I couldn't tell whether he was making chemical experiments or cooking dinner. "There is," he went on, "but one more step for me to take. I must become an artist and then I can make anything, from a cabbage to a diamond." I looked appealingly at the nearest young man and he said simply, "That's so." I hesitated and then, as though he had nearly forgotten it, added, "anything." "Three years ago," continued Edymion, "after consulting with Professor Le Conte I came to the conclusion that Oregon was the field in which my theory should stand or fall. I sent three young men here in quest of silurian soils as free from oxidization as possible. With these I experimented and nearly succeeded. My failure I became satisfied was due to contact with a dryer air than you have here, and I felt that if I could come on the ground and take the soil in its unoxidized condition a real test of what I believed would follow. I am here and in a word it has turned out just as I expected. I was delayed in coming out here by a desire to perfect the phonograph. That is done, but this thing, the results of which are simply astonishing, will revolutionize the world. I got the idea of coming out here first from Sir John Herschel. Professor Hilgard—although I did not wholly disclose my thoughts to him, came within an ace of hitting the truth but was held back by old theories which within a month will be entirely exploded and so accepted by science. The monoclinal fold in the strata here is of such a vast extent that I can feed the world for twenty centuries—anything, from a cherry to a beef, at a cost of about, oh say, one fifth of present prices. You can't make a corner of it even if you know the process, for the simple reason that Colorado covers another vast field of silurian formation, but not so free from oxidization as you have it here. It is strange to me that the existence of silurian mounds out here in so many forms did not suggest to some scientist the views that occurred to me. But even if they had, no such results as I have obtained could be achieved without the use of electricity. To make it plain, you know that everything we eat has its original source in the earth, in the soil, yet the agency of the air, the sun or rather warmth, and the agency of water is demanded to produce growth in the animal and vegetable kingdoms. All vegetables and animals existed in a wild state at some period of the earth's life. For plant life we must have carbon, hydrogen and oxygen; for animal life to these must be added nitrogen. The elements of the earth have all these and besides silicon, calcium, magnesium, aluminum, iron and potassium. To separate these in the source of life in the originating deposit of their existence, and to determine the exact amount of each, I have brought to my aid electricity. When I stumbled upon fluorine in a free state I saw my way clear. Berzelius over eighty years ago found that in the electrical decomposition of salts oxygen and all oxidized bases attach to the positive pole and alkalies, but a slight remove from its and their bases appeared at the negative. The simple voltaic current will indicate the weight of each element in combination. Five years ago I discovered an agency of separation and with its use I have or can determine the relative combines of the smallest seeds, the greatest trees, and every condition of animal life. Cultivation and domestication have improved vegetation and animals. Cultivation has assisted the laws of nature. Take the potato. At one time it was wild and uncultivated. It was doubtless small, very small potatoes I might say, but by cultivation it has become large, it has by crossing attained new varieties, different tastes. No one knows how or why. Well, I have discovered why and how.

"I have not learned how to make a potato picket and all, but in ten minutes I can set before you the finest pot of mashed potatoes without using a potato that you ever saw. I can't make an ox or a cow or a heifer, but I can serve you in a jiffy with a steak that will make your mouth water. I'll do more. I'll give you a steak a half yard in diameter, one half equal to porterhouse steak and the other the finest veal cutlet you ever smacked your lips over. As for muffins, light bread and snowy biscuit, I will do away with the plow, the harrow, the thresher and the middle man and set them before you so quick you will think you're dreaming."

"Henry," he asked, turning to the young man, "is all [illegible] steak going?" "Yes." "Well, make a couple more and use a trifle more of the brachiopod taste and less of the [illegible]. Serve it in a [illegible] shell with toast. Run the tube through the catawba and shock it twice to clarify it thoroughly." He pulled out his watch and said, "In seven minutes we'll lunch."

I was so astonished I could only murmur something like thanks. The dishes were served. I have eaten at some notable clubs. I have partaken of terrapin at John Chamberlin's. I have relished the famous pompano at the Crescent club in New Orleans, but the turtle steak and toast surpassed anything that ever made my palate laugh. The wine was like crystal amber and the flavor—I can catch it yet. It lingers like a delicious memory of childhood. I was so mixed with dumfoundedness and delight that I must have acted half crazed. I remember murmuring my compliments many times and when we finished I felt I was in the presence of a wizard.

"From this moment until Sunday I shall be very busy," he said as I was about to leave, "otherwise I would ask you to come out and see me again. Until then please say nothing about this. On Monday morning of next week at 8 o'clock I shall have a few friends here from San Francisco, and I shall ask four or five from Portland, including the phonograph people. I will give a breakfast here at the White house and will be glad to see you and your friends. The breakfast will be prepared in the same manner that your lunch was. But that is confidential. Simply invite your friends out to breakfast and go into no particulars. At the close of the breakfast my assistants will prepare a collation for any who are not specially invited. It won't cost me anything. It will be dirt cheap, so you nor the public need feel under any obligations. The preparation, or to use the common term 'cooking,' will be done in plain sight. I will dump the soil, the dirt, for it is nothing else, right on the floor of the dining room, so that all can see, if they do not understand, the process. Remember, Monday morning, 8 o'clock sharp. Outside of my guests I don't care how big the crowd is. There'll be enough for all."

I left him. How I explained my absence to my friend I don't know. I was so dazed I couldn't explain that two and two made four. I have been in a daze ever since, and it will be days before I recover my equilibrium. If this article isn't coherent I hope you'll fix it up and put it in a readable shape. There is one thing certain. Thomas Alva Edison is the wonder of the age, as everybody will admit when they see it Monday morning, what I have already witnessed.

A BIG REAL ESTATE DEAL.

The Chicago 'Inter Ocean' Secures One of the Choicest Corners for $1,000,000

CHICAGO, March 30.—The largest real estate deal of the season involving a million dollars was consummated to-day, the Inter Ocean coming into possession of the northwest corner of Dearborn and Madison streets. This corner was recently bought by H. H. Kohlsaat for $7500 per front foot, the highest price ever paid in Chicago. The Haskell building, surrounding it in the form of an L, has been secured by a syndicate of which Clarence I. Ford and W. and Walter Leck are members for $100,000, the land being leased for ninety nine years at $30,000 per year.

The combined properties with a frontage of 100 feet on Madison street and seventy feet on Dearborn, together with an extension to Calhoun place in the rear, in all 9000 square feet, has been transferred to the Inter Ocean, represented by William Penn Nixon, for a new building, bearing its name. It will be one of the most prominent structures in the city, as this is one of the three choicest corners in Chicago.

'ASHTON WINS.'

He Whips Joe Lannon In Eighteen Rounds In Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 30.—Jack Ashton and Joe Lannon fought at Burrelville early this morning for eighteen rounds. The fighting was very light and the honors even. The articles called for but eighteen rounds, but through a misunderstanding another was called by the referee. In the opening Ashton led, catching Lannon under the ear and tumbling him to the floor, securing the first knock down of the fight. Joe came to his feet and had barely squared away when Ashton swung his right, catching Lannon this time on the jaw, and sent him down again. He got up dazed and Ashton went for him, forcing him by a succession of blows to the ropes, where he peppered at his head for several seconds, Lannon finally collapsing and falling full length on the floor. The ten seconds allowed by the rules elapsed, but Lannon continued on the floor senseless and the referee's verdict was, 'Ashton wins.'

SHE REFUSED THE OFFER.

President Harrison Offers the Postoffice at Lexington to Mrs. Stonewall Jackson

RICHMOND, VA., March 30.—It is stated here that only a few days ago President Harrison conveyed the information to the widow of Stonewall Jackson that he desired her to accept the appointment of postmistress of Lexington.

Her reply to the friend who wrote her that he was informed she had only to signify her willingness to accept to receive the appointment was that while sensible of the kindness which prompted the move she would be unable to give an affirmative answer but indeed must positively decline. She stated that her father is now 91 years of age and needs her presence, that the place did not suit her health and that she was confident that she did not possess the requisite qualifications for the office.

A GIGANTIC SCHEME.

Jay Gould Secures Control of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe.

NEW YORK, March 30.—Rumors are afloat to the effect that Jay Gould has made great progress. Some even say that practically he has accomplished the greatest railroad scheme he ever put through. That scheme, it is said, is no less than getting control of 7500 miles of road operated by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe. This becomes necessary in order to protect the Missouri Pacific. Putnam had it that one of the large stock holders of the Atchison delivered 35,000 shares to Gould yesterday; some said the number was more than this. With the other large amounts to be delivered this would give him an influential holding if not actual control.

PECULIARITIES OF PEOPLE.

Bill Nye's Recent Barn Storming Trip and What He Saw

He Casually Refers to the Personal Characteristics of Joseph Cook, Dr Mary Walker and Razzle Dazzle Riddleberger

The life of a barnstormer is filled with change in one sense. He is constantly meeting with different people. Almost all of them are that way. They are different from each other. This is a wise provision of nature by which we are enabled to distinguish individuals one from the other. The barnstormer moving about the country therefore has an opportunity for the study of human nature which is really wonderful. He sees large numbers of people everywhere, except in his audiences of course. This is really the only place where he can be by himself, where he can be alone and commune with himself.

Strolling about over the Union as I have for the past four months I have had the pleasure of seeing and communing with a number of men, all prominent in some line, and thinking that their personal appearance as it struck me might be of interest to the reader I have reluctantly consented to write some impressions of a few under the general title of "Eminent Men Whom I Have Saw."

THE GREATEST MAN ON EARTH

Joseph Cook, as the greatest man we have on the face of the earth to-day, according to calculations made by himself, would naturally come first. He is a grand man, engaged in thinking thoughts all the time of which he is the theme. He occasionally takes a day off, during which he cusses the newspapers in an earnest way, and then he goes back to hover over his porcelain nest egg of thought.

Joseph Cook might have a good deal of fun if he would just oversee the universe daytimes and let some one else do it at night, but the slightest irregularity in the habits of a planet will bring Joe out of bed in an instant. He worries all the time for fear that a new laid planet will wander away into the brush and get lost.

He dreads to die not so much on his own account but because he wants to be spared to those who are so poorly prepared to get along without him.

When he is colicky and fretful it is not that he cares a cent about it personally, but because he is all the time afraid to die and leave the universe in the hands of the Creator. He has been accustomed for so long to go around with a long nosed oil can searching for a hot journal in the solar system that he actually believes himself to be largely responsible for atmospheric conditions and astronomical phenomena.

In direct contrast with the firm and self reliant Cook let me briefly mention the name of the reticent Dr Mary Walker of Washington, D. C., shrinking at all times from the gaze of the world, lifting at times her sunny little head like a dewy daffodil with a pen wiper overcoat and then again shutting up like a jackknife. She is seen no more for quite a while.

A NEW WRINKLE IN PANTS

Dr Mary Walker dresses plainly at all times, and at eventide irons out her own trousers so that the crease down the leg or limb is the envy and admiration of all the other men in Washington. She says, however, that in case you are not where you can obtain a hot flat iron you may fold the trousers straight down from the first suspender button in front, bringing these two buttons together, and with a fold down the center of the back you have them in good shape to again fold directly across the knee. Then by putting them under the mattress you will find in the morning a very desirable crease down the front of each leg or limb of the pants or trousers.

Dr Mary Walker is a self made man, weighing in health a little over 83 pounds. She wears a Derby hat, "Lord [illegible]" overcoat, trousers of elephant's-breath cheviot, held in place by means of broad knit blue yarn suspenders with red morocco ends. Formerly she wore a more frail but more attractive suspender, but experience has taught doc that we should not allow our love for the beautiful to overcome our reverence for the imperishable.

Her practice prevents her in a great degree from mixing up in society, even if it were not for her shrinking nature. When she does go out, however, the matter of decollette dress does not worry her. She never wore a low cut dress in her life and yet people may be found everywhere who will tell you that she has done very little for the good of society. She wears a swallow tail coat on dress occasions, and in winter to prevent taking cold wears the vest of her business suit next to her in order to protect her chest. She steps blithely along the street trying to be a perfect gentleman but meeting with insurmountable obstacles at every step.

Dr Mary Walker may be seen frequently at the various departments in Washington modestly asking to be appointed to something, or later on escaping from the door of the department hurriedly in response to an appeal by the doorkeeper.

A CHEERFUL HABIT

On a muddy day she may be seen frequently standing on one foot and with the other resting on a drygoods box, cheerfully rolling up the leg of her trousers so as to look like a chappie. She is a good physician, but an indifferent surgeon I am told. She hates to cut people's legs off but makes a specialty of diseases of horses and cattle. I do not know this. I just give it as a rumor. She would accept a portfolio if it were thrust upon her, but she would rather die than ask for it. If she could be appointed minister to some place and the appointment came in a way that she could not honorably refuse it she would accept it. She could turn her patient over to some one else or knock him in the head and go at any time.

In her old home at Oswego, N. Y., one time Dr Walker in passing by a boy on the street who was moodily squirting with a garden hose said something to the boy which he could not brook, so he turned loose on Dr Walker by means of the hose until she was a sight to behold. Looking like the pioneer wife of a venerable polygamist on the way home through the rain in an old endowment robe, she made her way to the nearest justice of the peace and secured the arrest of the boy. Great crowds of people gathered at the trial. People knocked each other down in their efforts to get into the court room. At the end of the trial the boy was found guilty. He was fined $5 and trimmings, which amount was paid by the jury, after which the crowd presented him with a gold headed cane.

A few weeks ago I met on board a Boston bound train the venerable Josiah B. Grinnell, for whom the thriving young city of Grinnell was named. He is as hale and hearty as he was when the historical incident occurred which gave him his start and made a classic of that simple sentence, "Young Man, Go West."

HE WENT WEST

Josiah was the young man to whom Horace Greeley addressed the above remark and Mr Grinnell has demonstrated that it was a wise one. While the chances are somewhat narrowed down for a young man now to go West and start a city and build an opera house and open a bank, the theory that a young man will do better among strangers as a rule than where he has grown up and is still called a boy by his neighbors, holds good. It is a good thing that he should have the props knocked out from under him instead of rocking back in the home nest and opening his bird like mouth so as to reveal his inmost thoughts, at the same time expecting from year to year that the parent bird will drop a large juicy worm in it.

Mr Grinnell still has the letter written by Mr Greeley at the time, and although he has not yet succeeded in reading it all he is absolutely certain almost that Mr Greeley suggested that he would do well to go West. And so he did. It seems odd now that Mr Grinnell should have been addressed as "young man," for he is in the sere and yellow leaf period, having just left his measure for a new set of teeth a few days before I saw him, and which had not as yet been delivered. But he was a good talker none the less and as full of life as on the day he started out from Springfield, then a very young town, and began to do newspaper work in order to fit himself for the ministry. He quit the pulpit on account of his voice, which in trying to adjust itself to the acoustics of his salary gradually narrowed down until it could not be heard beyond the third row in the orchestra.

I tried to get his photograph for use in this letter but he hesitated and finally got out of it. I also saw him shudder and I thought that perhaps he had a prejudice against allowing his plain and rugged features to appear near my own piquant and sunny face, so I forgave him and we parted the best of friends. He is a very fluent conversationalist and prohibitionist. He speaks earnestly about the evils of rum and he has the right of it so far. How he will succeed with prohibition I do not know. Certainly there are places where it will take weeks and weeks yet to thoroughly overcome the evil. Take Washington, for instance, during a great celebration. Probably for [illegible] yet you can get intoxicating liquors in Washington if you go at it right and elbow your way up to the bar.

RAZZLE DAZZLE RIDDLEBERGER

This naturally brings up to my mind the name of Razzle Dazzle Riddleberger, who has just closed his tempestuous career as a senator and who may now at home in the quiet of his back yard carefully can his highly flavored past. As usual the Congressional Record will contain only the most meager account of his closing remarks in the senate, but it will go along in the memory of those who heard it with the speech of Andrew Johnson as twin arguments against the excessive use of mince pie flavored with spirits.

In closing this letter I will call attention to the fact that the barn stormer runs up against one query which is duplicated over and over again till it becomes with us the refrain for a topical song. It is "Where do you go from here?" And so as it falls into rude rythmical shape I append it here.

And where do you go from here? asks the host at our hotel,
And where do you go from here? asks the boy who answers the ring of our bell.
We have ordered ice water and towels and soap
  And a call at six or near
And our trunks brought up that the porter may ask,
  "Where do you go from here?"
The fireman asks, as he builds the fire,
  "Where do you go from here?"
And the old friends too, ere their calls expire
  "Where do you go from here?"
The barber who shaves us and grasps his tip,
  As we hurriedly disappear
With "call again" hushed on his trembling lip,
  Where do you go from here?
"And where do you go from here?" Oh heavens
  And where do you go from here
Till in fancy we stand at the last command
  Facing our doom with fear
Facing the keeper of the gates
  As he peers outside with a leer
And says, "Oh yes, you're them lecturers—
  Where do you go from here?"

A FATAL COLLISION.

A Mail Boat Runs Into a Steamer, Causing the Death of Several Persons.

OSTEND, March 30.—The steamer Countess of Flanders was run into at her dock at 2 o'clock P. M. yesterday by the Belgian mail boat Princess Henrietta during a dense fog. It was at first reported that the Countess of Flanders immediately sank. A later report however says she is safe but her captain, first lieutenant and nine of her crew and three passengers were drowned. Prince Jerome Bonaparte was among the rescued.

Advices received this afternoon say that the Countess of Flanders was cut in two and the fore part at once sank. The Princess Henrietta took the after part in tow and started for this port but had proceeded only a short distance when that portion of the wreck capsized and went down.

THE MAILS LOST

OSTEND, March 30.—The Countess of Flanders mails were lost after the collision. The collision caused her boiler to burst, blowing the center of the ship to pieces, killing all the engineers, the captain and others on the bridge and the passengers in that vicinity. Prince Leopold of Belgium is one of the passengers who escaped injury.

THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER

A Surprising Explanation of Mary Anderson's Illness

NEW YORK, March 30.—A surprising explanation of Miss Mary Anderson's illness is now suggested. For months dramatic critics have received letters from abroad containing statements detrimental to Miss Anderson and of a nature calculated to embitter the critics against the actress. These emanated from Miss Sarah Cecil, who is traveling in Europe for her health. Her monomania is an undying enmity to Miss Anderson. She was a pupil in a dramatic school in this city and conceived an affection for her instructor. He left to fill an engagement with Mary Anderson which aroused Miss Cecil's jealousy and inspired her attacks. This is thought to account for the derangement of Miss Anderson's nerves.

CONGRATULATIONS FOR LINCOLN

An Assurance That Americans in England Will Warmly Welcome Him

LONDON, March 30.—Colonel Gouraud, of the British army, who served on General McClellan's staff in the Army of the Potomac, has sent the following dispatch to Hon. Robert Lincoln of Chicago:

"In expressing as an old friend and comrade my most hearty congratulations upon the well merited honor you have received from the president and country, I may confidently and with assurance state that Americans residing in England will welcome you with quite exceptional unanimity and cordiality, no less on account of your personal merits than as the son of one whose name and memory are the pride and glory of us all."

JOHN BRIGHT'S FUNERAL.

The Customs of the Quakers Observed at the Grave

LONDON, March 30.—The funeral of John Bright took place to-day. Crowds of people lined the route of the procession from the residence to the cemetery. A number of deputations headed the procession. Eight of Bright's workmen carried the coffin.

When the coffin was deposited in the grave the mourners gathered around in silent meditation according to the custom of the Quakers, to which sect Bright belonged. The dean of [illegible] College delivered the oration.

BRIBERS ARRESTED

Two Prominent Citizens of Alleghany City Tackle the Wrong Man

PITTSBURG, March 30.—Richard Scandreth, secretary of the board of school directors of Alleghany City, and William Hadfield, a prominent liveryman, were arrested on a charge of attempting to bribe J. C. Ebbert, a councilman, to vote for Thomas G. Park for chairman of the select council. The arrest caused a sensation. The prisoners assert their innocence.

A Warning to Roumanians

ST PETERSBURG, March 30.—The Nova Vremya and the Svet express much indignation at the proclamation of Prince Ferdinand, nephew of King Charles, as crown prince of Roumania. The papers refer to the expulsion of Russians from Roumania and warns Roumanians to be careful.

Death of a Prominent Citizen

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 30.—Zachariah Chaffee, widely known as a trustee of the Sprague estate, died this morning.

THE WORLD OF WOMEN.

A Short Column of Special Interest to Wives and Sweethearts.

Don't Be a Slave to Your Next Gown—The Growing Fashion of Steel Embroidery, and Odd Paragraphs on Kindred Subjects

There are some women who live in a state of perpetual preparation of wardrobe, remarks Harper's Bazar. They never seem to acquire one in any approach to completion, and they are always in the act either of planning or of obtaining some separate portion of one in such a way that it would seem as if they lived to and for no other end or purpose, and the material of which their gowns are made must be of the nature of Penelope's web. If the women are those of but small means and of that class who never get a new bonnet till the shoes are shabby, and who by the time they get a new pair of shoes find the glory of their hat or bonnet tarnished, and gone of course the result is unavoidable, and there is nothing to say; they are doubtless doing the best they can or the most they can have. But it is perhaps more particularly of women who could do otherwise if they would, whatever the reason of their shortcoming may be, whether their own want of management or the executive skill or their husband's failure to make them an allowance and obliging them to get what they have from the [illegible] uncomfortably and as it were by driblet.

If a husband gives a wife only enough money to get one thing at a time it is not her fault that she does no more and has to keep her wits at work and her thoughts dwelling on the subject of the next article needed from [illegible] the dreaded task of getting the money for the next. But we speak here of those women who can have what money they think necessary for a wardrobe suited to their station and income, as often single women as married ones, as often independent women with bank accounts of their own as those obliged to ask others for what they want. They buy the material for a gown, and select its style and undergo the fitting and finishing and have it on and half worn out and buy some more material and undergo the same ordeal again, and so on the year through, and here they provide a bonnet and here an outer garment, and now they must have themselves about underclothing, and now the fancy articles of neckwear and general adornment claim their attention, and they never get anything till just as they need it, and the whole season passes and it seems as though they had done nothing else but think and plan and shop and procure their dresses and had really had no other thought in their minds. What an improvement on this way of doing would be a method that would let these women sit down and think out the whole business as nearly at once as might be. So many dresses for the season—this to be a suit for the street, with such a hat, that for the house and the other for the evening and so on, the various articles to be made in this style or the other, and made as rapidly as dressmaker and seamstress could turn them out, so many wraps and hats and all the rest, none, perhaps, a precise imitation or replica of what some other woman has and so all the more individual and worth having and wearing and seeing, when this done and a period of solid thought and work given to the task, the gowns and all their appurtenances laid away, then what freedom, what rest and what a sense of comfort and ease!

The impious young person who found a well fitting dress more to her mind than all the consolations of religion was not more comfortable than this foreseeing and provident woman will have made herself when she has thus taken time by the forelock, looked about her and done the worst labor of the season at one fell swoop. No more trouble of indecision as to stuffs and styles, no more torture of standing up to the dressmaker, no more wearing and weary work of the sort which makes one wish people were naturally clothed with feathers like the doves and had no choice in the matter. Other women may be going round hunting samples and selecting patterns and wondering if this will wear and that will wash and the whole will fade, and waiting on milliners and wasting the gray matter of the brain in deciding how they will have the thing done and if they will like it after it is done. But this woman is through with all such fuss and bother and fatigue so far as her wardrobe is concerned. She has nothing in the world to trouble her, no more solicitude, no more turning and twisting and deciding and providing, but thought and time are set free for other purposes. She can read, she can study, she can do fancy work, she can do charity work; she can do nothing.

An ornament which is increasing in favor is steel embroidery. It is less ostentatious, but not less effective than the other metals. A toilette which I have recently seen ornamented with it, designed to be worn at a distinguished nuptial mass, was of fine cream white wool, with the yoke of the corsage, the cuffs and a broad girdle covered with the steel embroidery. Figaro jackets are embroidered with it and the corselet and high collar with it accompany a shirred [illegible] with perhaps a tab to loop the skirt and a light fringe around its edge. Gray crepe de Chine is frequently embroidered with steel, it being a general rule in using the metal ornaments so much favored at present to apply them on one tone of the color of the material, steel on white or gray, gold on ecru or brown tints and so on.

The wedding dress of one of the spring brides, writes a lady, is simply perfect, being all softness of [illegible] chiffon in front, and the brocade at the back is so skillfully draped as to show none of the usual stiffness of brocade. The design of the brocade is daisies and their leaves. The lace trims the border of the train all round. It is surmounted by a soft drapery of [illegible] chiffon caught at intervals with sprays of orange blossoms. On the front of the lace is brought up on the right side to the waist in lovely [illegible] and the edges are [illegible] the satin in a lightly draped line. It is then carried round to the left side where it [illegible] the train begins. [illegible] chiffons [illegible] draped [illegible] the fichu of the dress [illegible] is made with a high [illegible] in front is filled in with muslin lace edging, either side of the brocade in front. A sash of the fairy like muslin falls from the waist edged with lace. The sleeves are high and puffed on the shoulder. A small cluster of orange blossoms [illegible] at the waist and a chatelaine of similar flowers is to droop among the lace and muslin.

The bride is to wear a few sprays of orange blossom in her hair and her veil is to be fastened with daisies of diamonds and pearls. Her traveling dress is peacock blue velvet and cashmere trimmed with blue and gold passementerie. The bride's mother is to wear at the wedding a silk dress in a very soft bright shade of rosewood trimmed on the bodice with old Spanish point and on the shoulders with pale gold passementerie. The skirt of the dress is perfectly plain and has a band of the gold embroidery at the edge, and coming in a rounded line to the waist at the right side. The mantle is in two [illegible] of the bois de rose color in cloth and is trimmed with the gold passementerie. The bonnet is [illegible] and is embroidered with gold birds, trimmed with lace and with strings of lace, which are to be fastened with diamonds. A knot of velvet of the color of the dress brings both into harmony with each other.

CHAPTER V

Miss Carrie Van Zandt sat in her window at the San Pablo house and looked out over the plaza. Darkness had fallen, but a faint glimmer diffused from stores and saloons showed that the square was crowded with men, and every moment the broad doors of the Spread Eagle, just opposite, swung open and a gush of ruddy light streamed across to the entrance of the hotel The whole population seemed to be abroad, and the "dago" element, overawed for once, had slunk into the background Miss Van Zandt sat in solitude and watched the shifting throng

The young lady had left New York a few months before to visit relatives in San Francisco. She had keenly enjoyed her first taste of Pacific coast life and had been tempted by the pressing invitation of her school friend, Lucy Starkweather, to extend her wanderings as far as San Antonio The capital of San Antonio county was not an easy place to reach, and a smile flitted across Miss Van Zandt's pretty face as she recalled some of the experiences of her cross-country staging, and how the clever management of a certain young gentleman—a San Francisco acquaintance whom she had met at Orvietas—had smoothed away many a difficulty of the primitive journey Their recollection seemed to leave a pleasant train of thought, for the girl dwelt on it for some time and the smile lingered in her eyes

She had not seen much of San Antonio The day after her arrival Sheriff Starkweather had been summoned to San Pablo and had brought his daughter and her guest with him Carrie had accompanied him very willingly. She had heard of the wild, rough life of the California coast range, and was glad to have an opportunity to observe it. But her first two days at San Pablo had been rather uneventful, and the tragedy of that afternoon, though exciting enough, had only shocked her. For the first time since she had left New York she was conscious of a little homesickness

What could be detaining Lucy? Miss Starkweather had gone to her father as soon as she learned that he had reached the hotel, and had been with him ever since Carrie glanced at her watch, Half an hour and more had she been left alone. Her first impulse was one of impatience; then she rippled out a little laugh that ended in a sigh. Where the sheriff was, there also would his prisoner be, and Carrie's sharp eyes had already detected Jack Scott's admiration for her schoolmate. But the laugh soon merged in the sigh. The young fellow was arrested—charged with this horrible murder, and if there ever had been a chance for a bit of romance in that quarter, the chance had vanished now It was not that Miss Van Zandt believed Scott guilty of the crime imputed to him. Her brief acquaintance with the young man had taught her that he was a gentleman, and to a girl of Carrie's antecedents this fact alone rendered the accusation absurd But still it seemed nothing short of impossible that a young lady of her set should marry a man who had been suspected of homicide

The room had grown very dark, but Miss Van Zandt would not light a candle She preferred to sit in the window and watch the knots of men forming and dispersing in the plaza under her eyes. All the saloons were doing a rushing business. The swinging doors of the Spread Eagle were scarcely closed for a minute at a time In a general way the crowd seemed to feel the effect of its potations, but none had drank to excess. It would have been difficult to single out any given man and say he was intoxicated

The door opened and Lucy entered She paused a moment on finding the room dark.

"Are you there, Carry?" she asked.

"Yes, dear, here I am, Come to the window and watch people. San Pablo is in a ferment."

Lucy came slowly forward "Why are you all in the dark?" she inquired.

"I couldn't sit here and look out if I had a light behind me could I?" answered Carrie 'Tell me, dear," she went on, making room for her friend beside her, "where's your father and—Mr. Scott?"

'They have just started for San Antonio," answered the sheriff's daughter.

'A night like this?" exclaimed Carrie in surprise. "Why they can't see the road"

'Papa knows the way very well," answered Lucy. "He didn't think it was safe to keep Mr Scott here over night, so he took him down to the livery stable, got a team out quietly and started off the back way."

"Didn't think it was safe!" echoed Carrie. "Why he wasn't afraid Mr. Scott would try to escape, was he?"

"No no Papa doesn't think Mr. Scott guilty any more than I do. That was not the danger"

"Lucy spoke calmly, but there was a suggestion of nervous tension in her voice and an uncertain tremulous motion of the hands, that did not escape her companion.

"What's the matter, Lucy?" she asked. "You're all upset about something Has anything happened?"

Then Lucy gave way altogether, and leaning her head on her friend's shoulder, sobbed unrestrainedly for a few minutes. Carrie did not speak but drew the weeping girl close to her, and stroked her hair with a soothing touch that seemed to have an effect at last.

"I am so glad they have got away safely,' she said presently "I suppose that is what makes me so foolish, but I feel better now"

'But what is there to be afraid of?" persisted Carrie.

'The committee of safety," answered Lucy.

"The committee of safety! What's that?" inquired the bewildered stranger

"We've had so much disturbance and riot lately," explained Lucy, "that the citizens have organized a vigilance committee to keep order."

'You Californians are a queer people," remarked the New York girl. "Do you mean to say you have to get up a mob to enforce the law? Haven't you any policemen?"

"Police? No" answered Lucy "Papa's sheriff, you know, and with the assistance of the two deputies he is supposed to keep the entire county in order"

"Supposed is good, so far as I can see," remarked Carrie, glancing down at the plaza where the crowd seemed to increase every moment

'There's Judge Boone" said Lucy, as the doors of the Spread Eagle swung open; "he's sure to be a ringleader How glad I am that papa has got clear off'

"But if the man is a judge," remarked Carrie, 'surely he will uphold the law'

"He isn't a judge really," explained Lucy "The first day he came here he was a referee at a chicken fight, and they've called him judge ever since. Titles don't mean much here."

"Well, you Californians are the queerest people," said Carrie

"What's that? what's that?" exclaimed Lucy, leaning forward anxiously; 'what are they going to do now?"

There was a movement in the crowd, and a couple of barrels that stood outside Smith's store were rolled forward into the center of the plaza, Someone laid a plank across them and the extemporary platform thus furnished was at once occupied. The mob gathered round in a dense mass, and the speaker, to judge by his gestures, was treating the bystanders to a very animated address.

Lucy grew almost frantic.

'Who is it, Carrie—oh, who is it?" she gasped

"I can't tell, dear; it is so dark just there," answered the other.

At this moment the doors of the saloon were flung back and a man rushed out. The hoarse applause as it emphasized the points of the orator reached the girls where they sat. The light that poured from the Spread Eagle was cut off in a moment as the doors swung to, but Lucy had caught a glimpse of the speaker's face, and she sank back in her chair.

"It is Field," she said, faintly.

"Mr. Field, the editor of the Independent!" asked Carrie. Oh, well, he'll keep them in hand. He'll certainly preach moderation."

"You don't know him," said Lucy. "He's the most mischievous, unruly—papa says he's a regular firebrand Carrie," she added, springing impulsively to her feet, 'I must hear what that man is saying"

She caught up a long cloak which was lying on a chair, and moved toward the door. Carrie started up aghast.

"Lucy Starkweather, "you don't mean to say you're going out into that crowd!"

'I must, Carrie, I must hear what they intend to do. Do you know, if they decide to execute their bloodthirsty law on poor Mr Scott nothing can save him—and papa will lose his life trying to defend him"

"But Lucy reflect," urged Carrie, clinging to her friend's dress "What good can you do—and they have gone—they're a couple of miles on the road to San Antonio by this time"

"That is the only comfort I have," cried Lucy, "but how do I know they will be safe in San Antonio. These men would think nothing of following them—and papa will not be prepared. I must know, Carrie, I must know. Let me go," and tearing herself from her friend's grasp, she burst from the room.

Carrie hesitated a moment Her first impulse was to follow, but a wild shout from the mob outside came just in time to unnerve her With pale cheeks and trembling limbs she turned back to the window, and dropping on her knees, rested her elbows on the sill and gazed out on the square, which sent up murmurs through the darkness as if swept by the waves of an invisible ocean She saw a black-shrouded figure pass out from the hotel veranda, and she knew Lucy had mingled with the turbulent crowd

CHAPTER VI

When Mr. Byrne returned from Morley's plateau that afternoon, leading by the ear his son and heir, and remonstrating with the lad on the morbid taste for horrors which he displayed, the honorable gentleman had a double object in view. He wished first to remove his boy from temptation, and he was also anxious to see that the bartender who presided at the Spread Eagle was alert and ready, for Mr. Byrne expected a large trade in the evening. It was within his experience that any excitement or unusual occurrence had a tendency to promote thirst in San Pablo, and long as he had resided there he had never seen stronger symptoms of excitement in the village than he had seen that day.

As they passed the church Mr. Byrne yielded to young Pat's entreaties to let go his ear.

"Why aren't ye at home studyin' in yer book?" inquired the father with some asperity.

"I tell you, pop," answered the boy, "there's no lesson to-morrow. It's the school picnic."

"Ah so it is," remarked Byrne; "I might ha' known, but this thing has put ivery thing out o' me head Let me see; ye go to the vineyard, don't ye?"

"Of course we do. Didn't you tell Mr. Jeffries that as long as you couldn't get your grapes picked, he might as well have his picnic there, for the more we'd eat the less there'd be to rot."

"Don't you ate too much, Pato, me boy," said the father; "but sure ye'd have better sinse nor to do the like o' that."

"Well, I should smile," answered young Byrne with supreme contempt. "Grapes are no treat to me. I can have all I want any time Let the other kids burst themselves with the trash if they feel like it, but not yours truly."

'That's right, me boy," said his father, approvingly "It'll be a thrato to the other children, an' may give the docthor a job, which he stands in nade of, the dacent man, but you know betther."

By this time they reached the plaza, and having ordered Pat to "run off and play himself," Mr Byrne, sr., entered the Spread Eagle

As soon as the doors closed behind him his father, Mr Byrne, jr, whose appetite for horrors was as yet unsatisfied, took the back track at a speed which would make but little of the half mile or so which separated Morley's plateau from the village plaza.

The Hon. Pat found the bartender at his post, and a loafer, who answered to the name of Corvey, when not too drunk to answer to anything, was endeavoring to negotiate a glass of liquor with the official in charge. As Corvey had neither cash nor credit, the transaction was not very hopeful, and Byrne cut it short.

"G'long out o' this, Corvey. Haven't ye nothing betther to do nor try an' bum whisky?"

Corvey explained that he would be incapable of such conduct, and that he had only dropped in to report to Mr Whitehead the news of Dick Morley's murder.

"Ay, it's a fine reporter ye'd make. I must ax Mr. Field to put ye on the staff of the Indipindint," said Mr Byrne with fine irony. Then, as Corvey slunk out, he turned to Whitehead.

"Ye've plinty of stock in, Charley?"

"Plenty," answered the bartender.

"There'll be a power dhrunk here the night. This business o' poor Dick Morley's has raised the divil in the boys."

"Well, we'll try and lay him if drink'll do it," responded Whitehead cheerfully, tucking up his sleeves and preparing for the rush that seemed imminent

Mr Byrne stepped behind the bar and assisted him in arranging the glasses and bottles conveniently at hand. As a general thing the Hon. Pat, though sole proprietor of the Spread Eagle, would have scorned to interfere; but this was a special occasion Besides the saloon was empty. All the available population of San Pablo was grouped around Colonel Morley's house, or straggling homeward along the ravine road.

"Field's up there yet," muttered Pat. "It seems to me that for a gintleman and a scholar, he takes a power o' interest in a matter o' this kind."

"He's a newspaper man," remarked Whitehead, "so it's his business in a way"

"That's thrue," assented Byrne; "but it's inconvanient I can't see him just now. There's a special correspondent from the San Francisco Morning Summons doin' the vineyards down this way, and whin he comes I want him looked afther"

"Oh, Field'll attend to that right enough," said Whitehead "When do you expect the chap from the bay?"

'I expect him whin I see him, the same as any other newspaper man," answered Byrne "You make the world o' him av ye see him, Charley, fer by reason o' this sthrike, I can't show him any great shakes in the vineyard line, an' there's the more cause for bein' tindher o' the young man"

Presently the saloon began to fill up as various groups dropped in, fresh from the scene of the murder The Hon. Pat was affable and talkative, and extended numerous invitations to partake of the hospitalities of the place and accepted or excused himself from ten times as many. Presently Field entered and Byrne drew him aside and explained that he desired him to be on the watch for the San Francisco correspondent.

"What's his name?" inquired Field

"I have it here," answered Byrne, producing a large bundle of letters from his breast pocket and sorting out one of the mass, "here's the letter of introduction he sint me His name's Mr. James Ruggles, an' he's comin' to write up our grapes—if he was come to help gather them I won't say but what he'd be more welcome, but sure, God's will be done I want ye to take him under yer censorship, Mr. Field, an' show him around. Any expinse ye can charge to the office, an' av coourse I needn't tell ye that everything here from champagne down is free, an' av ye don't see what yer want ax fer it. D'ye mind now?"

"What time does the gentleman arrive?" inquired Field, who had taken rapid notes of the instructions given him.

"He's comin' over from San Miguel, on horseback, likely. He'll be here some time to-night, so be on the lookout for him."

By this time the saloon was crowded. It was growing dark and lamps were lighted and hung in front of broad reflectors. The room looked cheerful and animated and contrasted pleasantly with the gathering darkness outside. Mr. Byrne had not been deceived in his forecast. San Pablo was all astir; the plaza was growing more crowded every moment, and the people passed the doors of the Spread Eagle in an almost continuous stream,

Everyone seemed to be speaking at once, and the talk grew louder and wilder as bottles were opened and glasses drained The death of Dick Morley and the fate of his murderer were the sole topics of conversation

'It's come to this, boys," says Boone dogmatically, addressing the little group of which he was the center, "either this ere town has got to be run to suit murderers and loafers and bummers, or it's got to be run so as decent people can live in it. There's no two ways about it"

'Jack Scott ain't no loafer nor bummer," remarked Hank Dollett.

"Who said he was?" retorted Boone, 'I said loafers and bummers and murderers—includin' all the criminal classes. Now, he's a murderer I s'pose There ain't no gettin' round that."

"No; it looks pretty much as if the judge had got it right" admitted Smith, and other voices murmured assent.

Field, having escaped from Byrne, joined the group

"It's just as Judge Boone says, boys" he remarked "What's the good of having a vigilance committee if it don't work? We were doin' first rate; we ran Juan Estudillo out of town, we made the dagoes sing mighty small, and now, when the worst crime of all is committed are we going to weaken just because the man that shot Dick Morley was one of ourselves and a man who ought to have known better? No, I say"

Mr. Field's words were cheered to the echo, and Hank reaching over to the bar, grasped a bottle of whisky from which he filled the empty glasses

Meanwhile another group collected around Pat Byrne, was discussing the same question

'Its printed in your own paper, Mr Byrne," said a tall, dark-browed fellow—a dealer in fish known all over San Antonio county as Every Day Pete "Here it is," and the speaker struck a copy of the Independent so violently as to tear it, before he read

It is with great pleasure that we announce to our readers the foundation of a committee of safety which has undertaken to rid the town of the ruffians who have been holding a carnival of crime in our midst The majesty of the law will hereafter be maintained in full force The penalty of the next infraction of the peace is death. The robber or the murderer who falls into the hands of the committee of safety will be hanged without benefit of the clergy. Let the evil doers beware.

Every Day Pete had a harsh, high-pitched voice, and before he had finished he had an audience far more considerable than his own immediate group. As he concluded, a ringing cheer broke from all parts of the crowded room, interspersed with such words of endorsement as "Bully for you!" "That's the peach!" "Sock it to 'em," and the like. Mr. Field, the author of the paragraph, bowed his head and stood modestly conscious of his merit."

Every Day Pete turned on Mr. Byrne.

"There it is in your own paper. Are you going back on it after printing the committee's proclamation yourself?"

The Hon Pat's position was not easy. An habitual trimmer, he now found himself confronted by a force whose theory he had approved, but whose practice all his instincts condemned. In this position he could be consistent in only one direction. He could continue to trim, and he did so. "Me frinds," he said, throwing himself into an oratorical pose, "a committee of safety or a vigilance committee may be a very good thing, an' I don't say, havin' regard to the sarcumstances o' the case, that we could ha' done any betther. Them's my sintimints that ye read in the Indipindent, and it's to vice me sintimints to this community that I pay Foxy—I beg his pardon—Mr Chamberlain Field, a gentleman and a scholar, $25 a week. But, ye'll folly me in this, fellow citizens, a vigilance committee, the best o' thim, ain't the law, and anything outside the law or alongside the law is a poor lookout for a man in my postion, that owns the vineyard, and the newspaper and the best sample room in San Pablo, wid over wan-fifth o' the taxable property o' the township to boot."

Byrne's speech was received with mingled cheers and laughter. Corvey, who had come back with the crowd, and had contrived to pick up his share where liquor was so plenty, felt emboldened to remark·

"You own too much, Mr. Byrne, that's the trouble."

"Maybe I'd better make over the sample room to you. There'd be no fear o' the stock spoilin' on your hands anyway," retorted the proprietor.

This raised another laugh at the expense of Corvey, but the temper of the crowd did not improve

"I say lynch law, rather than no law," shouted Every-Day Pete, "and if the sheriff can't keep peace in this part of the county—"

"Go aisy there, Pete," interrupted Byrne "It was me nominated Sam Starkweather for sheriff, and a betther, a dacenter, and honester man niver walked the sile o' the free and glorious state o' California"

There was a general movement of the crowd towards the door. Some new impulse had seized on the men, and they were trooping out of the saloon with Field, Boone, and the leading spirits at their head.

Pat exchanged glances with his bartender. "Sam's beyant at the hotel," he said. "I think he'd betther know what kind o' temper the boys are in," and Mr. Byrne passed out with the last of the throng. The saloon remained nearly empty.

A rude platform had been improvised outside and Foxy Field was haranguing the mob. Byrne did not stop to listen but forced his way on toward the hotel.

"Gentlemen," shouted Field, as a dead silence fell on the pushing, struggling crowd, 'the majesty of the law has been outraged Our distinguished fellow citizen, Colonel Richard Morley, has been assassinated. With the enterprise characteristic of a true newspaper man I was at the scene of carnage before the shooting took place. Citizens of San Pablo, the red hand of murder has been unsheathed in our midst. Murder's been done, and the murderer has got to swing for it. There's no appeal from Judge Lynch except to the Supreme Judge of all mankind."

A hoarse cheer from the crowd emphasized the speaker's words.

Young Pat Byrne, returning for Morley's plateau, stopped in wonderment at the scene in the plaza. Field continued to speak with a ready flow of words that were not without a kind of rude eloquence. Mr. Byrne entered the hotel, stumbled in his haste against Hayman Jeffries, who stood in the doorway

"This is bad business, Mr. Jeffries," said Byrne

"They will talk and drink all night and do nothing," said the schoolmaster, and there was a touch of impatience in his voice

"They'll get through talkin' an' get to doin' presently, and then they'll do more in a minute than they can undo in their lives," answered Byrne, passing on into the hotel.

Jeffries shivered, and then coming down the steps, drew nearer to the speaker.

Young Pat started violently as a light hand was laid on his shoulder and a soft voice whispered in his ear.

"Do you know what they're going to do, Pat?"

"How you scared me, Miss Lucy," said the boy. "No, I don't know what they're up to and I can't wait. The sheriff sent me to—"

"Hasn't he gone to San Antonio?" asked Lucy breathlessly.

"He started, he and Mr. Scott, but it was so dark that he drove into the gully near the church and smashed the wagon. The horses bolted on for their own stable and are half way to San Antonio by this time most likely. He sent me back to ask my pop for the loan of a wagon to go on with"

"Oh, God! they dave not got away then," said Lucy, in an agonized whisper.

"No; they're waiting in the church till they can get a team I must go and find pop," replied the boy.

'Pat, will you do me a favor?" asked Lucy.

"Anything in life, Miss Lucy," replied the youngster, with the ready chivalry of boyhood "What do you want me to do?"

"Run back and—no, no—" Lucy interrupted herself and thought a moment. 'Go and find your father and tell him what has happened, but do not tell anyone else—don't breathe it to a soul that any accident has happened."

'Why not?" asked Pat

"Because I beg it of you. Promise! You won't say a word."

"Not a word then, since you don't want me to But, Miss Lucy, where are you going?"

"I'm going up to the church to see my father?"

"But aren't you scared? It's dreadful dark —and—"

"Please do as I ask you; won't you, Pat?"

"All right, Miss Lucy. You can count on me every time," answered the boy starting toward the hotel.

A wild cheer from the crowd hailed the fiery peroration which concluded Field's speech

"Bring out the bloody murderer!" "I'll talk to the sheriff" "Law and order forever"

Thus the crowd, surging with wild yells toward the hotel. Haman Jeffries stepped out of the throng and pressed his black sombrero down over his brows.

"Now they will act," he muttered with a strange smile.

Lucy drew back as the advance guard of the mob approached her For one breathless moment she listened to the shouts and curses with which the avengers of blood heralded their advance

Then she drew her cloak closely around her and light as a bird fled up the sandy road that led to the church

BEAUTY AND BRONCHITIS.

Ye ladies, who will shortly go
To court for presentation, know
That the great palace drawing room
Ere now, alas! hath sometimes been
For frozen limbs before our queen
An inefficient thawing room.

The wintry wind blows keen and cold,
And some of you are getting old
(Or whatsoever term it is
That you prefer), while some are weak,
And from experience can speak
Of "physical infirmities"

The female neck and arm, of course,
Are beautiful but there's some force
In statements, seeming sensible
That of such points to make display,
In public and the light of day,
Is slightly indefensible

And though perhaps it will be said
That I'm a noodle, and my head
Is fast becoming vapory.
Yet draughty passages ne'er could,
I fancy, be considered good
For dames with scanty drapery.

Then here's advice for all who can,
And dare confess to any man
That they have some anxiety
For health To the lord chamberlain
Hie off, and his permission gain,
To clothe you with propriety

No doubt it might be hard to own
You're aged, or delicate have grown,
Or pains or aches—you're feeling them,
But facts are facts, and ills are ills,
And coughs are coughs, and chills are chills,
Howe'er you'd be concealing them.

Maybe some British matron, who'd
Pronounce a picture of the nude
An outrage done indecently,
Will sooner have her shoulders seen,
Than claim the boon our gracious queen
Has offered to her recently.

But heed them not, dear ladies, pray,
Let common sense direct your way,
And don the high necked bodices,
By giving up the dress call'd low,
You'll look more comfortable—though
Not quite so much like goddesses.

HAUNTED OR WHAT?

BY W. H. ROSS

Copyrighted, 1889, by the Author.

The Emily Ludlow was an unlucky craft. A two-masted schooner of 350 tons register, built at Bath, Maine, she was one of the tautest and fastest vessels ever launched in the Pine Tree state. But for all that, she never made a dollar for her owners, or more than a bare living for Captain Sam Stone, who sailed her from the day she left the stocks until she went ashore five years later on the bar off Chatham. Her ill luck began on her first voyage from Portland to Fernandina, when she lost the mate overboard, and never knew a break. She was haunted, or if not haunted, pursued by an intangible something that made her shunned by seamen and shippers alike. It was my ill fate to sail as mate of the Emily on her final voyage. I had knocked about Portland out of a birth for two months, and was penniless and hopeless enough to have shipped for the North Pole in a long boat, when Captain Sam offered me a chance as mate for a run to Charleston. I knew her by reputation, as indeed did every seafaring man on the mast, and it was only the hardest sort of circumstances that forced me over her rail as second in command We left Portland on the 11th of November, 1879 Before we had catted the anchor and had the Scotland light on our port quarter the trouble began. She carried a crew of three before the mast; a cook, and myself and the skipper. Two of the sailors were Norwegians and the third a Russian Finn, and according to seamen's superstition a regular magnet for misfortune. I had just come aft to take the wheel while Captain Sam ate supper, when a loud cry from for'ard brought the skipper on deck. Janso, one of the Norwegians, came lumbering aft holding his left wrist in his right hand and uttering exclamations of pain. He had been overhauling a length of chain with the Finn for'ard of the windlass, and in the darkness and lurching of the vessel—there was quite a sea running—the latter had missed his footing and struck Janson a heavy blow on the wrist with a chain hook. I was enough of a surgeon to see that some bone had been fractured. We patched the injured member up as well as we could, but Captain Sam would not turn back and we went to sea short-handed with a poor devil lying helpless and groaning in the forecastle. The wind was blowing fresh from nor', nor'west, and backing to the north'ard. By eight bells it was blowing so fresh we stowed the outer jibs, and I was for reefing the mainsail. But Captain Sam wanted to drive her and wouldn't listen to me. At the changing of the next watch at eight bells, or midnight, it was blowing half a gale, and when I turned out—the skipper had stood the first watch—she was dipping the jib boom into every other sea. I had thought the skipper's breath smelt pretty strong of liquor as I passed him in coming on deck, but when I saw him a few moments later taking a long pull and a strong pull at a bottle I concluded that my suspicion that he always kept his main sheet pretty well started was very close reckoning I had the Finn in my watch, and was standing the first trick at the wheel myself, and could see him dimly as he emerged from the shadow of the foresail just forward of the traveler and peered over the bow to windward every other minute

Suddenly there came a crack like the report of a rifle, only ten times louder, and the jib sheet parted in an instant. Instead of standing by, the Finn came aft like a crack yacht on the wind, uttering the most bloodcurdling yell that ever startled my ears. He came up to me jabbering like a madman, and before I could get anything intelligible out of him and bring the vessel up in the wind we had shipped half a dozen seas, and everything movable on deck had been washed clear aft and into the lee scuppers. This racket brought all hands on deck, and when the skipper had relieved me at the wheel I found the Finn crouching behind the starboard bitts mumbling away prayers or curses in Finnish and shaking like a man with the Chagres fever. He was half crazy with fright, and when I grabbed him by the collar he spit and snarled at me like a cat, and I literally had to kick him off the quarter to get him for'ard.

By the time we had rove a new sheet and got things shipshape, the Finn had righted sufficiently to steer, and I sent him to the wheel and stood lookout myself. The wind was still freshening, and was now blowing northeast. Some ill looking clouds had blown up to the east'ard and settled over the whole horizon like a big black pall. We had made the course well off shore to get Cape Cod well on the lee, and according to the log, if the wind held, would be off Highland Light by daybreak. What bothered me most, next to the certainty of bad weather, was the parting of the jib sheet. It was a new rope, and even if a poor one, the strain had not begun to be sufficient to warrant its parting in the way it did I examined the ends as well as I could, and they appeared to me to have been cut as cleanly as though the job had been done with a sharp knife I should certainly have suspected the Finn of having a hand in the master if he had not been so badly scared No man, I thought, could simulate such an intensity of fear as he had manifested. The whole affair, coupled with the accident to Janson and the reputation of the vessel, made me a trifle uneasy; but I had been going to sea long enough to have come across a good many things that I couldn't explain, and I tried to put the whole thing out of my mind by lighting my pipe. But I had hardly got settled into a comfortable smoke when I saw or felt something that literally made my hair stand on end, my heart feel like a lump of ice, and the blood recede from my cheeks like the ebbing tide in the Bay of Fundy. I say something; for I don't know what it was, nor have I ever been able to give it a form, even in my own mind, much less describe it. The shock must have effaced, like a wet sponge, on the log slate all recollection or distinctness of memory, and momentarily paralyzed my mind, leaving only the deepest and most abiding impression of horrors the brain can receive As near as I can recall it, I seemed to feel a horrible, blood curdling influence, rather than to perceive any distinct shape, and yet the impression of something tangible, something partly palpable to the vision is dimly recalled. It seemed to be in front of me, beside me, behind me and above me In fact to encompass me entirely and weight me with such a chill of dread, horror and unspeakable terror that I could not utter a gasp, move hand or foot nor scarcely breathe I don't know how long the feeling lasted, and I think I should have gone to the deck in a dead swoon in another instant had not the small chain or ring stopper holding the ring of the starboard anchor to the cat head parted and the next pitch of the vessel thrown the fluke of the anchor off the rail, to which unfortunately it had not been lashed, and sent the anchor and ten fathoms of chain plunging into the sea The roar of the chain through the hawse pipe and the sharp shock to the windlass brought me to my senses, and with a shriek I stumbled over the traveler and got aft the Lord knows how —I can never tell We were in too deep water for the anchor to touch bottom, and its weight only served to bring the schooner's head down a trifle, and make her steer like a horse with the bit in its teeth Captain Sam and all hands turned out in a hurry for the second time in the watch I expected the skipper would sing me a sea song to a lively tune. But he didn't, he seemed to take everything for granted He quietly asked me what the difficulty was and took the wheel, sending me for'ard to right matters And no easy job it was I now understood the repugnance of the Finn towards the bow of the vessel, and I dare say I felt as bad as he did, although I had to use physical force and plenty of it, to induce him to man a windlass brake. I mustered all hands and started to get the anchor aboard, but before we could heave in a fathom the chain broke and the whole gear went to the bottom for good and all. By eight bells the weather had settled into a hard northeast gale and it took all hands half the watch to double reef the foresail and put a single reef in the mainsail It was daylight by this time and the flying jib had washed loose and was shaking to the pitching of the schooner like a rag on the end of a stick The sail had to be restored or lost, but not a man in the crew would cross the forecastle deck. I would have gone myself, but Captain Sam said no

'One man can't handle that sail," he said. "Better lose the sail than a man," he continued. "If it aint one thing it'll be another. I've"—and he laughed in a peculiar defiant way that made me look at him closer than I ever had before—"I've seen it goin' on for five years, man; never knowin' what's comin' next, but allers knowin' somethin' would come—an' it allers has an' allers will."

"Capen," said I, "why don't you leave this vessel?"

"Leave the vessel!" repeated he slowly; "why, I can't, man, I cant. What good would it do if I did? There's"—heaving a despairing sigh—"some things that a man can't leave nor forgit."

And he left me with a moan and stumbled down below to his brandy bottle. Well, thought I, here's a queer skipper and a queerer craft. But I was too tired to indulge in any speculations on the subject, and went below and turned in. I don't think my head touched the pillow before I was asleep, but the watch hadn't half gone when I was awakened by shouting on deck and the tramping of feet overhead. I turned out to find that the flying jib had been carried away, and the jib boom with it. When the wreckage had been cleared away as well as the heavy sea would permit, I dropped into the galley to get a cup of hot coffee. The cook was a typical downeaster, and startled me by asking·

"You've hearn tell this ole hooker's bein' harnted, ain't yeou?"

I nodded my head in assent.

"Wal, I guess yeou've begun ter think so. Maybe yeou've never hearn tell the story about the skipper!"

'No, I never have."

"Wal, I kin spin it ter yeou."

"This vessel," continued he, after a moment's pause, 'was built for Sam Stone. S'pose yeou've hearn thet? The first v'age he made in her a young feller named Ed Staley went ez mate They'd both bin courtin' the same gal, an' ez she wuz a out an' out flirt each uv 'em thought he wuz the gal's best fellow. The mate had her pictur over his berth an' the skipper seed it an' pulled it down. When he found somethin' sweet writ on the back in the gal's fist it made bad trouble between 'em. They had words several times after that an' cum nigh ter blows But the mate wuz cooler 'en the skipper an' it went along all right till one night off Hatteras, when they wuz alone t'gether on the fo'k'sle deck, one uv the men said he hearn 'em jawin' like all possessed. But anyway all at onst the jib sheet parted, jes' ez it did last night"—and the cook bent forward and lowered his voice significantly as he repeated, "jes' ez it did last night, and the skipper were runnin' aft shoutin' 'Man overboard,' 'mate's overboard.' They lowered the boat, but they never seed the mate again, that is, not in human form." And the cook gave me another significant look. "The skipper," continued he, "told how ez he'd bin knocked overboard by the jib when the sheet parted. He paid the crew off in Floridy an' sailed hum, with all hands strangers One of the crew out wuz a shipmate of mine in the brig Lucy White, an' he sed he'd looked at the jib sheet an' thet it looked like it hed been cut with a knife. Mor'n that; he sed he found a capstan bar under the fo'k'sle deck with blood an' hair on it. Neow yeou're a man uv parts, an' kin put things t'gether an' make sumthin' out uv 'em, an' p'aps yeou kin explain sum things ter yerself, ef ter nobody else."

By nightfall the gale had worked more to the east'ard, and increased so in violence that we hove the schooner to under a storm trysail. The story told by the Finn to the injured Norwegian and his shipmate had reduced them to a condition of abject terror, and neither threats or blows could force one of them a step for'ard of the midship house. By midnight we were off the Race making strong leeway, and the gale increasing in violence every minute. The skipper acted like a man half dazed with liquor. When I dropped below for a moment I found him sitting on the edge of his bunk and muttering to himself, and continually clenching his hands. I spoke to him, but could get no more intelligible reply than something about "the end must come." Considering the tight corner we were in, on a lee shore with the wind and tide against us, this sounded anything but agreeable, and I was hastening back on deck when a dreadful cry rang above the howling of the storm, and springing up the companionway I caught a glimpse of the face of the man at the wheel in the dim light of the binnacle lamp. It was a countenance transfixed with horror.

He reeled backward to the deck, and as an immense wave swept the schooner fore and aft, the trysail split and in an instant was blown into a thousand fragments In a moment more we were in the trough of the sea, and I expected every second that the craft would either go on her beam ends or founder. But she righted on her keel, and with a desperate effort I dragged the captain on deck and into the main rigging The foremast had gone by the board, taking the main topmast with it. The last glimpse I had of the cook was as a sea carried him past us, almost within arm's length, in towards the breakers and death. It was but a few minutes, though it seemed as many hours, before the seas swept the schooner into that white, seething vortex over the bar, and we struck with a shock that I would not have believed the mainmast would have withstood. Captain Sam roused himself from his stupor and gazed wildly around.

"Are you afraid of hell?" he shouted in my ear

"Pray, skipper, for God's sake, pray" I cried "This is a time for prayer"

"I am not afraid of hell," he shrieked back. "I have lived in it for years, for years!" And he threw his hands wildly about his head and would have fallen into the sea had I not held him against the shrouds

"I see it! I see it!" he shouted in his frenzy, and pointed into the darkness. "There —there——" and breaking from my grasp he plunged headlong into the swaying waves. When clinging to a spar, I was dragged from the surf at daybreak, by the lifeboat patrol. I was literally more dead than alive. I was the only man that ever lived to relate the last voyage of the haunted Emily Ludlow. If not haunted, what?

CATARRH CURED.
A clergyman, after suffering years from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying all known remedies, at last found a recipe which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren st., New York City, will get the recipe free of charge.

THE ALPINE ICE COMPANY

Blocks to be Slid In a Chute From Mount Hood to Portland.

A Mammoth Enterprise Planned by a Brilliant Peruvian Engineer and Built With Home Capital.

PORTLAND, April 1, 1889

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

I have just received from my friend, the Peruvian Inca Pancho-Ozollo, a registered letter containing nothing but a small key, in the handle of which is fastened a parchment tag with the inscription, "key of my desk in the corner of your office. Open at once"

I had never yet touched the desk save to brush off the dust from day to day, as one mows the grass from a friend's grave, and I therefore came to its key hole with a sort of reverent hesitation, almost doubting if I had a right to open the sacred thing, for it is one of my moral idiosyncracies to view the properties and rights of friends with a vastly greater reserve and diffidence than I feel towards anything belonging to a stranger, because on this tender care for those who trust us depends so much of the love and confidence and the beauty of friendship.

I opened the desk and found the enclosed manuscript, which I lose no time in sending you, since it clears up the good name of my friend, which has been suffering on account of his leaving here without sending out his P. P. C cards.

ALFRED F SEARS.

Disastrous Ending of the Alpine Ice Company, of Portland, Oregon.

After careful consideration of all the circumstances, I have determined that I must, with my own hand write a statement of the events, which preceded the collapse of this now famous company, if I do not wish to be held responsible for more than my share of a failure, which at best is sufficiently mortifying to my professional vanity.

In the early part of last August, when the weather of Portland became insupportably hot by reason of an exhaustion of the ice supply of the city, I perfected a plan by which the temperature of the region could be reduced and the town, by the same means, supplied with splendid natural ice within reasonable limits of cost.

I deemed it not best to entirely unfold the details of this plan to any individual, lest the well known selfishness of business men should lead them to initiate a counter scheme and so ruin a project, that promised excellent dividends to the investors.

Recognizing the success of the distinguished Mr. Henry Villard in getting money out of Portland I set about studying his system and called into council one of his very apt disciples, who has lately become eminent as a follower of the great railroad king, in the establishment of a pretty scheme, known as the Electric Sugar Refining Company.

With such a leader in enterprise and such adroit counsel, I organized a corporation known as the Alpine Ice Company, with a paid up capital of $6,000,000, of which I took the controlling part, namely, $3,000,001, in exchange for my inventions, and was elected president of the company, a near and dear relative of mine being at the same time chosen secretary and treasurer.

It may, perhaps, be said that a "blind pool" was formed, for the subscribers paid in the balance of the stock amounting to $2,999,999 without annoying inquiry, and instructed the president to employ a civil engineer at a salary of $15,000 per month. Feeling the necessity of harmony in the executive department and for other reasons, which modesty naturally forbids me to mention, the choice fell upon myself, who thus united under one hat the collective head of the institution

I do not hesitate to acknowledge that my success in securing the deposits of the stockholders was, in a great degree, due to an impression prevailing in the public mind that I had formerly been in some way associated with the newspaper press, and was, therefore, entitled to unlimited confidence; a very correct conclusion, certainly, and one that every member of our advanced civilization should seek to perpetuate.

I now proceed to state with some minuteness the features of my plan for aiding Portland, which I undertake to say has never been exceeded in boldness of design, ingenuity of execution and success in concentrating the surplus wealth of Portland, save by my great prototype, the distinguished German of Mills' building.

Those who are familiar with the city of Portland understand that it is dominated by a magnificent extinct snow-capped volcano exactly 41 851-1000 miles distant in an air line a little to the south of east from the city Referring to the map it will be learned that this ancient volcano is Mount Hood and that its summit is 12,000 feet 5 inches higher than Portland. I say "referring to the map" because the people of Portland have the same modest sensitiveness about Mount Hood that marked the Bostonian with relation to the "big organ" and mention it as rarely.

It has been claimed for Boston that it bought and paid for the "big organ" and is thus entitled to some vanity in its presence, while Mount Hood is only a natural production. This was once the generally accepted notion about this region; but a learned geographical society, known more accurately as the immigration board, has, I believe, decided that Mount Hood was built by the bankers of Portland to facilitate their established system of freezing out new comers.

Let this be as it will, Mount Hood is there and the summit is an eternal mass of solid ice. The elements of this volume I have gathered by personal observation; from the notes of scientific men, who have visited the summit, and from heliographic observations made by distinguished army astronomers in Kamm's tower, the city observatory of the weather bureau.

That disappointed stockholders may understand the tedious care with which all my work in this affair has been done, I present in testimony my solution of the important problem by which I learned that on the 10th day of August at 9 o'clock in the morning, the thermometer at that moment being 85 degrees above zero at sea level in the sunshine, the volume of ice above the line of perpetual snow was 3,983,000 817 tons 1528 pounds 11 ounces, and was dissolving in the ratio m1 ...m2 . m3 plus.

To make this beyond dispute let V equal volume, a equal vertical distance in feet of apex above center of average level at snow line.

b equals hy. log. of prime ordinates of an infinite number of chords subtending horizontal arcs at snow line.

—c equals hy log. of prime ordinates of one-third of an infinite number of chords of re-entrant arcs producing irregularities in the perimeter of which b is the hy. log

d equals $\pi \times r^2$ the area of any circle

g equals specific gravity of Mount Hood ice

h equals allowance for error in averages

m equals an increment in a hyperbolic correctional by which differences in temperature are reduced to avoirdupois o equals impressibility of stockholders represented in ponderable material.

p equals waste in weighing.

With the conditions thus clearly stated, there need be no difficulty in solving the following simple equation by which the desired result is reached:

Here then was an immense fortune right in sight of every home in Portland. For suppose it worth but $1 a ton!

Here was where my invention came in. I had discovered such a combination of aluminium with steel that the tensile strength of this latter metal by the alloy is increased 3917 3 10 times. Indeed one can hardly call it steel any longer when so combined, and I have, therefore, slightly changed the name. That my amalgum may be recognized I have introduced its initial letter into the new metal which I call steal

With this new metal the whole difficulty of transportation was solved as follows: On the east of Portland there is a considerable eminence known to the aborigines of that vicinity as Mount Tabor. Standing upon the summit of Mount Tabor, you find by observation that no obstacle in the way of giant pine or foothill intervenes between your eye and the snow line of Mount Hood, just about thirty-nine miles distant. If it were possible to find a wire strong enough to subtend that distance and carry a practicable load, the thing was done.

Evidently my new amalgum steal was the article.

The Samoan Disaster Even Worse Than First Reported.

FIFTY AMERICANS WENT DOWN

Admiral Kimberly Sends a Complete Report to the Navy Department.

LIST OF THE UNFORTUNATE MEN

The [illegible] Sent to The Congo [illegible] Disaster [illegible]

Washington, March 30.—The following cablegram was received at the navy department this morning:

Auckland, March 30.

Secretary of the Navy: [illegible] hurricane occurred at Apia [illegible] the harbor [illegible] English man of war Calliope [illegible] The Trenton and Vandalia [illegible] to losses. The Nipsic is beached and her rudder is gone. She was hauled off but the chances [illegible] Will send her to Auckland if possible. The Vandalia lost four officers and [illegible] Captain Schoonmaker, [illegible] John Roche, Henry Baker, W. Brisland, Wm. Brown, quartermaster; Michael Cashen, [illegible] B. F. Davis, Thomas G. Downe, [illegible] Sterling, Adolph Goldner, George [illegible], Joseph Griffin, E. M. [illegible] Hanchett, C. H. Hawkins, W. H. [illegible] Jones, George Jorden, M. H. KIMBERLY.

The following dispatch has been sent to Lieutenant Wilson, for Admiral Kimberly, in care of the American consul at Auckland:

SECRETARY TRACY'S REPLY.

Take such [illegible] regard to the Nipsic and her [illegible] and [illegible] men and means [illegible] deem proper. [illegible] is given you. The Monongahela sailed for Apia February 21.

TRACY.

THOUGHT TO HAVE MAILED AN ACCOUNT.

Admiral Kimberly's dispatch is taken to indicate that he has already mailed an account of the wreck. By hard work it may have been possible for him to have caught the mail steamer which arrives at San Francisco April 17 next, in which case full advices may be expected here April 20.

OPINION OF ADMIRAL HARMONY.

It is the opinion of Admiral Harmony, who is familiar with the Samoan islands, that the English man of war owed her escape to the fact that she had steam up and was enabled to push out to sea. The number of vessels lying in the small harbor was a source of danger to them individually, for if one dragged anchor she would probably collide with and carry away another ship which might otherwise have been held securely.

The news of the disaster created a profound sensation at the navy department. Everybody from the secretary down freely expressed their regrets. Secretary Tracy could not see any cause to condemn anyone of the officers in command of the vessels. Every man doubtless adopted all the proper precautions against the disaster, but these hurricanes which are of cyclonic proportions are simply irresistible, as was proved by the extent of the [illegible] vessel.

It is said at the naval department that Admiral Kimberly's cablegram conveying the news from Samoa cost between $800 and $900. Telegrams of inquiry were received by Commodore Walker from the mother of Lieutenant Sutton and the wives of Captain Schoonmaker and Paymaster Ames. Suitable replies were made and telegrams were also sent to Editor J. Roche of the Boston Pilot, informing him of the death of his brother.

LATER ADVICES FROM AUCKLAND

Merchant Vessels Also Wrecked or Damaged—The News in Germany.

Auckland, March 30.—Later advices have been received here regarding the hurricane which devastated Samoa and wrecked a number of German and American war ships. They say the storm swept the island on the 16th instant. The war ships attempted to put to sea, but only the English steamer Calliope succeeded in getting out. The merchant vessels suffered severely. The bark Peter Godfrey, one other bark and several coasters were sunk and four persons drowned. The Calliope sailed for Sydney. The Peter Godfrey was a German bark recently arrived at Samoa from Sydney.

THE NEWS IN GERMANY.

Berlin, March 30.—Advices received by the naval authorities report that the storm raged between the 15th, 16th and 17th instant. Seventy persons from the Eber and twenty from the Adler were drowned. The Olga started ashore, but was saved. All the merchant vessels anchored at Samoa foundered. It is officially announced that [illegible] officers and [illegible] men from the Adler and twenty men from the Eber were drowned.

The Mariposa is entitled to carry only 250 passengers. The department of state has been requested by telegraph to grant permission for the steamer to take extra passengers. The steamship Alameda left Auckland three days ago and [illegible] touched at Samoa to [illegible] It is thought that she will bring a large number of the shipwrecked sailors to this port without waiting for the Mariposa to [illegible] orders. The Alameda is due here April [illegible]

The steamer Zealandia will sail for Auckland next Saturday, and in order to connect [illegible] from Washington [illegible] have to be under date of to-day or to-morrow.

ADMIRAL PORTER.

San Francisco, March 30.—The Examiner's Washington special says: Admiral Porter [illegible] to say much concerning the Samoan wreck in the absence of details regarding the storm and the movement of the vessels. He says: "Whether there was any chance for our vessels to put out to sea, or whether they could have put out if they had [illegible] to venture in open [illegible] the three vessels we had there were staunch enough to justify the statement that their being wrecked was not due to their age or weakness. I suppose they could not hold and were carried on the beach."

RESTRICTIONS REMOVED.

San Francisco, March 30.—The Oceanic Steamship Company have received a dispatch from the treasury department at Washington stating that the naval office would impose no restriction on the Mariposa's carrying more than the usual number of passengers, providing they were shipwrecked sailors of American vessels at Samoa.

NATURE OF THE STORM

Description of a Hurricane Which Recently Swept the Fiji Islands.

San Francisco, March 30.—The correspondent of the Sydney Morning Herald, writing from Levuka under date of February 1, describes the hurricane which swept the Fiji islands on the previous week. The storms there are of the same nature as those which have just swept over Samoa. The correspondent says:

The new year commenced with heavy rains and strong southeast winds, the boisterous weather [illegible] and since prevailing being generally welcomed, past experience going to show that in this [illegible] hot weather in the early months of the year were as a rule [illegible] precursors of hurricane gales during the March equinox.

No apprehension of any serious gale were entertained until Sunday, the 20th inst., when with a falling glass the wind began to shift. Throughout the next four days, with heavy and continuous rainfall, the gale gradually increased in violence, [illegible] culminating point being reached Thursday, the 24th, about midday. The islands of Taviuni, Mango and Vanua Balavu (generally known as Loma Loma) have suffered most severely. On Mango the cocoanut palm groves have been [illegible] about [illegible] more severely than in the severe hurricanes experienced in March, 1886.

The cane fields have been destroyed, not a single stock above the height of a few inches being left standing. On Vanua Balavu the native food crops are reported as completely ruined. The cocoanut groves in many places are leveled, and in the [illegible] town of Loma Loma storekeepers have suffered severe losses from the partial destruction of their buildings. The same losses have been experienced in the towns of Vuna, Somosomo and Wairiki on the island of Taviuni. At the latter town it is reported that the Roman Catholic chapel, a new building, was lifted from its foundation and [illegible] where it landed a few feet away. No casualties occurred among the shipping in Levuka harbor, but the cutter Aon, from hence to Loma Loma, has been wrecked on [illegible] of [illegible] island, and her cutter, the Anna, which [illegible] is reported to have gone down after [illegible] on the island of Namena.

From Koro a report comes of a tidal wave sweeping over the low lying lands on the southwestern [illegible] of the island, causing great destruction of native property and the death by drowning of several children.

VIEWS OF A RETIRED OFFICER.

Washington, March 30.—Lieutenant Edward [illegible] Hayden, retired, in charge of the meteorological division of the hydrographic office, is regarded as quite an authority on the subject of marine storms. He says that cyclonic storms are a feature of the South Pacific regions. They have a motion exactly the reverse of those occurring in the north hemisphere, but otherwise have about the same characteristics. The paths is [illegible] and they occur several times a year in some years. It often happens that two or three seasons go by without a storm. Experienced seamen can detect the approach of such storms in the West Indies, but the same rule might not hold good in Pacific waters.

SCANNING THE DEATH LIST.

Pathetic Scenes at the San Francisco Recruiting Office.

San Francisco, March 30.—At the naval recruiting office here the officials have received a press copy of the list of persons drowned and showed it to the crowd of applicants for positions in the navy which at all times may be found there. The men gathered around anxiously and for some time scrutinized the list closely, exclaiming now and then, "Poor fellows," "too true," etc.

"Let me see that quick," said one brawny seaman, who could not squeeze in through the crowd close enough to read the names. "My brother was on the Vandalia. Let me see it, I say," and with that he reached over and snatched the paper. He shook like a leaf as he hurriedly scanned the list and then suddenly burst into tears, dropping the paper to the floor. "My God," he sobbed, "poor Frank is dead. Mother could not sleep for the last three or four nights, and kept saying all the time that she felt as though something had happened to Frank, and now it's true."

The poor fellow then sat upon the bench, and covering his face with his hands sobbed like a child. Frank Jones was his brother and his name appears among the lost.

Meanwhile other anxious eyes were scanning the list of unfortunates. Exclamations of sorrow and pity were frequently heard when the name of some friend or acquaintance was recognized.

"Here's the two Kelly boys," said one. "Well I knew them. Two of the best fellows in the world. They were both young and [illegible] in the court for every [illegible] years. They happened to [illegible] out of a job when recruits were [illegible] for the Vandalia [illegible] berths aboard of her. Poor boys. But I suppose all of us sea dogs will get the same dose some day."

A little German lady, pale as death, had been waiting about the place since the early morning. At this juncture she made her way to where the list was being scrutinized [illegible]

THE HOME OF THE HURRICANE

Interesting Statement by a Naval Officer at Washington.

Washington, [illegible]—The terrible disaster [illegible] special interest to [illegible] furnished for publication [illegible] Dyer, U. S. N., hydrographer to the bureau of navigation [illegible] the hydrographic office. The division of marine meteorology has charge of all data relating to the meteorology of the various oceans of the globe [illegible] facilities for publication [illegible] one-tenth [illegible] of the information [illegible] be published [illegible] almost all the time of the division [illegible] the preparation of the monthly [illegible] the North Atlantic. This great [illegible] redoubled force to the urgent [illegible] on the April chart published [illegible] establishment of a [illegible] system of telegraphic [illegible] from the West Indies during [illegible] season (July to [illegible] of our gulf and Atlantic [illegible] commerce of every [illegible] the waters.

[illegible] Islands, Lieutenant Dyer [illegible] the southern hemisphere, and the [illegible] months are therefore the summer months of that hemisphere—that is, December to March, inclusive. In the West Indies the terrific tropical cyclones that originate there as gigantic whirlwinds, rotating in a direction against the hands of a watch (as you look at a watch laid down with face up) move bodily westward and then northward into the temperate zone and eastward again in higher latitudes. In the Southern hemisphere, however (about Samoa, for instance), tropical cyclones that originate near the equator have the opposite rotary motion, revolving in the direction with the hands of a watch, and move bodily westward, then curve to the southward (away from the equator) [illegible] eastward again in the South temperate zone.

The [illegible] track [illegible] which [illegible] on the [illegible] originated probably on 300 miles to the northward [illegible] latitude 10 degrees south, longitude 160 degrees west, and moving rapidly southward directly towards them. If the signs [illegible] of the approach of a hurricane were observed (a [illegible] cirrus cloud [illegible] fine [illegible] [illegible] at dawn and [illegible] no doubt all possible precautions were taken to ride out the storm at anchor. The center of the hurricane must have passed directly over or very near the harbor, and in case of a very severe tropical cyclone (as this must have been) absolutely nothing can resist its fury.

In the great hurricane that crossed the Island of Cuba in October, 1844, for example, seventy-two vessels foundered [illegible] anchors in a few hours in the land locked harbor of Havana [illegible] almost [illegible] fled for security of its anchorage.

AT THE DEPARTMENT

A Description of the Dangerous Harbor—The Wrecked Vessels.

Washington, March 30.—Captain Selfridge, U. S. N., was found at the navy department this morning studying over a chart of the harbor of Apia, which he visited several years ago. He said that while it was a very bad harbor it was the best on the island of Upolu. Like all of the Pacific island harbors, that of Apia is formed by a coral reef encircling the island at a short distance from the shore. The anchoring space available for men of war is contracted, being about one thousand feet wide at the mouth of the harbor. The bottom is sandy, affording slight hold for an anchor, and the harbor is exposed on the north. On each side of the entrance are coral reefs which are awash at high water and are surrounded by shoals. The depth of the water ranges from four to eight fathoms, pretty deep water being found close in shore, which would enable a ship to get close in.

Hurricanes or cyclones at Apia are usually from the southwest and they tend to force vessels on the rugged reefs or rough shores. The last hurricane occurred at Apia just six years ago. Fortunately no men of war were in the harbor, but every merchantman was driven out or wrecked. Houses were destroyed and palm trees uprooted.

EFFECT OF THE NEWS.

In the navy department it was noticeable that while the line officers mourned for the men most, the bureau officers had an equal regret for the ships.

The officer in charge of the naval construction bureau said: "The Trenton, which was Admiral Kimberly's flagship, was the best wooden ship in the American navy and the best ship of the old navy. The Vandalia was another fine vessel and had been thoroughly refitted in the Mare Island navy yard at considerable expense just before she sailed."

The engineer officer recalled the fact that the Trenton, which is set down as having a speed of twelve knots, when in the Red sea astonished Englishmen by easily running away from the crack vessels of their fleet rated as fourteen and sixteen knot vessels. She was launched in New York in 1877 at the navy yard. She was ship rigged, 253 feet long, 48 feet beam, drew 20 feet and six in[illegible] and was 6000 tons displacement, or about 800 tons more than the Boston and Atlanta. She had 431 officers and men aboard when she sailed from home.

The Vandalia was built at the Boston navy yard, launched in 1876. She was 39 feet beam, 1 feet 3 inches draft and 2100 displacement. She was rated as a twelve knot ship and carried 200 officers and men.

The Nipsic sailed away from the United States with 180 officers and men aboard, making the total strength of the American fleet at Samoa 800 men, or nearly double the strength of the German forces.

The Olga had seventy-six men, the Adler 128 men and the Eber sixty-seven men. Yet with one half of the number of the American forces these unfortunate vessels appear to have lost more than twice as many men. Some of the naval officers think this an indication that the American vessels had greater structural strength than the German ships, or that superior seamanship was shown.

MORE VESSELS NEEDED

There Are No Available Ships to Send to Samoa.

Washington, March 30.—By the destruction of the American fleet at Apia the navy department finds itself confronted with a serious problem. Short of the China station, where there is a small fleet of old wooden vessels, at least one of which can never hope successfully to cross the Pacific, there are almost no American war vessels worthy of the name in the Pacific ocean which can be sent immediately to Samoa. It would not be a wise policy to allow events there to drift along without the presence of one or more American naval vessels. The hostile armed factions on the islands are no longer under the restraining influence of men-of-war representing any civilized nation, and property rights at least might be insecure if life was not in jeopardy.

The Monongahela, an old store ship carrying a couple of howitzers, sailed with stores for Samoa from Mare Island, Cal., February 21, and should arrive in a week or two unless she encounters bad weather. The Dolphin, a dispatch boat which is formidable through the possession of one great gun, might be ordered from China, or the Mexican now at Panama might be sent to Apia, but this about completes the list of available ships, and none of them would be worthy to represent the authority of the United States.

By dint of extra work the Charleston, now building at San Francisco, might be gotten ready to sail in about three weeks, but her batteries would not be complete, and the government would be at great expense, as the contractors would probably insist upon the [illegible] the [illegible] for [illegible] the [illegible] the vessel as a condition precedent to accelerated work.

THE NEWS IN SAN FRANCISCO

A Number of the Unfortunate Seamen Were from This Coast.

San Francisco, March 30.—The news from Samoa of the wrecking of the American and German men of war in the harbor of Apia caused much excitement on the street. Every bulletin board was surrounded by an anxious throng eager for particulars.

[illegible] whose interests extend to the South [illegible] questioned regarding the disaster expressed a belief that no American merchant vessels were in the harbor of Apia at the time of the disaster, though a number of coasters were reported wrecked. [illegible] some other island trader carrying the American flag had run in there for protection. Some surprise was expressed that so much damage should have been done in a harbor, but it is to be remembered that the harbor of Apia is merely an open roadstead surrounded by coral reefs.

The escape of the English man of war Calliope is accounted for in [illegible] in two ways: either that she was lying in the outer berth and consequently had more time to get up steam and leave harbor, or that having more experience with these [illegible] the British commander got up steam as soon as he saw the storm gathering, and put out to sea before the storm reached the harbor.

From accounts received by vessels arriving during the past two weeks it would seem that wind and rain storms in the South Pacific ocean have been exceptionally severe, and [illegible] the Oceanic Company's steamship Zealandia, which arrived here from Sydney on March 10, shows that the vessel experienced heavy seas during the voyage, and on March 14 she passed the Mariposa bound for Australia, which was heavily laboring.

Commodore John Irwin said concerning the disaster that it was wholly unprecedented in the history of the navy.

"Not through the war period," he said, "even along the Atlantic coast, was there any disaster comparable to this."

"Those hurricanes are local disturbances of terrific violence," said one gentleman. "I spent many years in that region, and know how sometimes the hurricanes will come almost without warning and in less than four or five hours all will be calm."

"There is hardly any anchorage in Apia harbor," said Captain Leary of the U. S. steamer Adams, which recently returned from Samoa, "and it is a very difficult matter to keep a vessel off shore in ordinary weather. The anchors keep dragging and when I was there with my vessel I found it necessary to carry my anchors out every morning to keep the vessel from going ashore."

From reports received it would appear that the commanders were warned of the approaching storm four days prior to its arrival, and it is strange they would remain anchored in harbor surrounded by reefs and wholly unprotected when by going out and around to the lee side of the island, a distance of about fourteen miles, they would be safe from any gale or hurricane.

The loss of the paymaster and clerk with Captain Schoonmaker of the Vandalia is considered due to observance of the naval rule that the captain should always be the last to leave his ship, and the paymaster and clerk should not leave until just before the captain.

The officers and crew of the Vandalia were well known in San Francisco, and there were many touching scenes at the [illegible] State navy office when the list of names of the dead was displayed. Many persons living in this city lost friends or relatives on board the wrecked vessels. One of the lost, John Davis, is understood to be a relative of a wealthy family somewhere in the East, but was disowned for marrying a girl his inferior in social position. When his wife died Davis came on to San Francisco and only a few weeks ago signed as seaman on board the Vandalia.

George Gorman, one of the crew of the Vandalia, was well known among Pacific coast faring men. He has a family living, it is thought, either in Vallejo or Benicia. John Marchett was recently employed on one of the ferryboats running across San Francisco bay and signed as a recruit on the Vandalia. John and Thomas Kelly were employed in the navy some time before going to Samoa. It is believed their relatives reside in this city. Charles Kranz was also living here, and previous to entering the navy it is believed he worked as deckhand on one of the steamers plying between San Francisco and Yaquina.

THE AMERICAN CONFERENCE

Duties of the Commissioners Just Nominated by the President.

Washington, March 30.—The persons named by the president to-day to be delegates to the conference between the United States and the republics of Mexico and Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo and the empire of Brazil, to be held at Washington during the present year, were nominated in accordance with an act of congress passed May 24, 1888, which authorizes the president to invite the several governments of the republics of Mexico and Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo and the empire of Brazil to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington at such a time as he may deem proper, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective governments some plan of arbitration for the settlement of the disagreements and disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for the consideration of regulations relating to the improvement of business intercourse and the means of direct communication between these countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations and customs union as will be beneficial to all, and secure more extensive markets for the produce of each of said countries.

A FEW MORE NOMINATIONS

President Harrison Selects Delegates to a Most Important Conference.

Washington, March 30.—The president has sent the following nominations to the senate: John S. Abbott of New Hampshire, to be minister to the republic of Colombia.

FROM TACOMA

A Charge of Defalcation Denied—The Outgoing Governor.

Tacoma, March 30.—The following press dispatch arrived here to-day:

Hartford, Conn., March 30.

A. B. Bull, who was until last week bookkeeper for Beach & Co., investors, is a defaulter to the amount of $[illegible]000. Bull's property will be sold to make good the deficit.

Mr. Bull, with his wife and two sons, reached here yesterday morning and is staying at The Tacoma. He denied in conversation with The Oregonian correspondent that there was any truth in the report and stated that Beach Brothers were his brothers in law. He said there was no defalcation nor shortage in accounts, but before coming out here he had put his property in the hands of Beach Brothers to sell for him, as he desired to take up his residence in Tacoma.

Since the fire at the electric light works there have been no street lamps lit, and slight accidents are of almost nightly occurrence, while it is unsafe for anyone with decent clothing on to move out at night, as they are liable to get up to their knees in mud at every step. Several suits against the city are already talked of, as the light company is furnishing private but no street lights.

County Assessor Cook holds that now the Puyallup Indians hold their lands in severalty and are recognized voters, their personal property is liable for taxes, and their lands [illegible] be. He will this year assess their personal property, but will endeavor to have the land assessed next year.

THE OUTGOING GOVERNOR.

Governor Semple was here to-day, and in conversation with The Oregonian correspondent [illegible] he had requested ex-Probate Judge Walker, [illegible] who was recently convicted of seduction in Seattle, to resign his [illegible] one of the members of the code commission. This was revealed [illegible] but [illegible] half of [illegible] heard from Mr. Walker [illegible] He was loth to [illegible] the matter, [illegible] conversation, Governor Semple also said that Lamar[illegible] Manzer, recently appointed minister to Central America, is a [illegible] and when General Semple, father of the governor, was minister to Central America with headquarters at [illegible] [illegible] Manzer [illegible] headquarters at [illegible] City, where he visited his father in law and [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Manzer [illegible] at [illegible] Cal., were in Tacoma and Olympia during most of the time the last territorial legislature was in session.

A SPIRITED WRESTLING MATCH

The Seattle Man Got a Chokelock on the Italian.

Seattle, W. T., March 30.—Ercole Arena, who [illegible] champion wrestler of Italy, and Peter Schumacher [illegible] of Seattle [illegible] champion middle weight wrestler of the [illegible] wrestled a match at Frye's [illegible] for $100 a side, according to [illegible] The match was Greco-Roman, two falls in three. Schumacher weighed about 15[illegible] pounds and Arena 168. The first fall was won by Arena in 9 minutes and 2[illegible] seconds. The Italian first obtained a hammerlock and then a half nelson on the German, and forced him to the floor.

In the second round Schumacher turned the tables and got a half nelson on Arena and threw him in 4 [illegible] minutes and [illegible] seconds.

In the third round Schumacher won the match by getting a [illegible] lock on the Italian. [illegible] was on his [illegible] and Schumacher choked him till he was black in the face, finally forcing him to turn over on his back.

From Spokane Falls.

Spokane Falls, March 30.—The real estate sales filed for record in this city for the first three months of this year aggregate $3[illegible] 833. A large portion of the purchases were made by persons who intend to build.

J. R. Allen has been appointed superintendent of the Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern railway and has assumed the position. He will appoint the company's agents at Medical Lake and Davenport, and at the latter place will deliver goods by dray to the merchants' doors at the same rates now charged by the Northern Pacific at the depot. Excursion trains will be run on Sundays hereafter.

BOODLE'S REVENGE.

Halstead Rejected by a Vote of 25 to 19.

A LONG SESSION OF THE SENATE.

Editorial Expression of the Cincinnati "Commercial Gazette."

HENRY WATTERSON TILTS A LANCE.

A Chivalrous Arraignment of Democrats and Republicans and a Noble Appeal to the Intelligence and Honor of the Country.

Washington, March 30.—The senate met at [illegible] and proceeded to executive business on motion of Sherman.

HALSTEAD AGAIN REJECTED.

The executive session of the senate lasted two hours this afternoon, being devoted almost exclusively for the third time to the case of Murat Halstead, nominated to be minister to Germany.

Sherman, Hawley and Blair spoke in favor of his confirmation, the two last named being listened to with especially close attention. At the close of the remarks the vote was taken on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was rejected Thursday. The motion was lost by a vote of 25 to 19. Evarts, Ingalls, Plumb and Teller voting with the democrats in the negative and Blackburn and Call with the republicans in the affirmative.

The republicans named explained their votes on the roll call by saying that they had no personal feeling in the matter and no antagonism against Halstead, but thought it right to defend the senate against such an attack as had been made upon its character by him in his paper.

A number of the senators paired, among them Cullom against and Farwell in favor of reconsideration.

GENERAL BUSINESS.

While the doors were closed the following general business was transacted: The resolution heretofore offered by Sherman for the appointment of the committee of two senators to wait on the president and inquire whether he had any further communication to make to the senate was taken up and agreed to and Sherman and Ransom were appointed.

Allison offered a resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information as to the trade between the United States and Mexico.

The resolution heretofore offered by Mitchell, instructing the committee on mines and mining to continue its inquiry into the causes of the delay of the settling of uncontested claims in the mineral division of the general land office, was taken up and agreed to.

The vacancy in the committee on civil service retrenchment caused by the resignation of Chace, was filled by the appointment of Higgins.

The senate at 3:10 P. M. adjourned until Monday at 1 P. M.

NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED.

Washington, March 30.—The senate has confirmed the following nominations: John Hicks, minister to Peru; George B. Loring, minister to Portugal; Robert T. Lincoln, minister to Great Britain; Allan Thorndyke Rice, minister to Russia; Thomas Ryan, minister to Mexico; Patrick Egan, minister to Chili; Robert Adams, jr., minister to Brazil; Lansing B. Mizner, minister to the Central American states; W. L. Scruggs, minister to Venezuela; W. O. Bradie, consul general to Corea; George Chandler, of Kansas, first assistant secretary of the interior.

FROM HALSTEAD'S PAPER

A Plain Statement of the Animus of the Opposing Senators.

Cincinnati, March 30.—The Commercial Gazette to-morrow, in an editorial on Halstead's rejection, signed by Richard Smith, will say: "Mr. Halstead's appointment as minister to Germany was rejected, not because of his unfitness for the place, for that question never was and never could be raised. He was rejected because, as an editor, he honestly criticised the methods by which men were elected to the United States senate. The origin of this matter was the election of Henry B. Payne."

The editorial then reviews the noted Payne case and justifies the course taken by the Commercial Gazette at that time. It says plainly that the defeat of the Payne investigation was due to the fact that certain republican senators "who had been elected by the same methods as Payne, i. e., by fraud, were threatened that if the latter should be investigated the matter would not stop there."

The editorial concludes: "What the Commercial Gazette said on the whole controversy was the truth. It was the truth when it was written. It is the truth now. Perhaps it was roughly expressed, but it was the truth all the same. For this Mr. Halstead was defeated and for no other reason. There was no pretense of an objection to him on the ground of fitness. He was rejected by senatorial frauds because he had the courage of his convictions and was not afraid to tell the truth. The result, therefore, cannot hurt him, but it is bound to hurt the guilty senators. Perhaps, too, it may lead to a line of thought, or increase the force of the line of thought, that will abolish the United States senate altogether, with its star chamber proceedings, or compel a change in the methods of election that will bring that body closer to the people and force its members outside of money influence. The people would be startled to know how many seats in the United States senate were bought with money and how many seats are therefore disgraced. This is a [illegible] [illegible] at last. The people will not tolerate it. This kind of corruption must be wiped out."

HENRY WATTERSON'S OPINION.

It Will Be Warmly Applauded by Republicans and Democrats Alike.

Louisville, March 30.—On Mr. Halstead's rejection, Mr. Watterson in to-morrow's Courier-Journal will say in part: "The rejection of Mr. Halstead carries with it primarily a warning from the senate of the United States to the press of the country to look to its utterances when dealing with that body or any of its members. Mr. Halstead's offence to the republicans who voted against his nomination or who did not vote at all was in his criticism of certain republican senators who had refused to enter upon the investigation asked by the republican legislature of Ohio into the election of Senator Payne. The election of Senator Payne was not a [illegible] open to question. With [illegible] the fo[illegible] intelligent democrat doubt that it was from first to last a [illegible] corrupt affair. Why the investigation demanded by the republicans of Ohio should be denied by any republican senator cannot be explained even at this late hour. Mr. Halstead threw all the combative elements of his essentially combative character into the fight, and especially against the obdurate republican senators. From his party standpoint he was entirely right. He did what any other brave and honest journalist would have done under the circumstances. He is punished by those of his own party whom he dared call to account for doing his duty as a partisan journalist.

"The democrats of the senate have assisted these republicans of the senate to punish him, and thus due notice is served by both parties in the senate upon the journalists of America to the effect that whenever a senator is publicly criticised he will [illegible] time to get his revenge by stabbing [illegible] in the back and in the dark. We doubt [illegible] the democrats of the senate, particularly the democratic senators from the Southern states, think that they are getting even with Mr. Halstead for his abuse of the South. But even if this were so, their position would be [illegible] contemptible and injudicious. With the fight over the confirmation of Lamar and the ready confirmation of many confederates to foreign posts of honor in our mind, it lies not in our province to talk about sectional revenges. Such talk can but fail to do more execution at the breech than at the muzzle, and in the long run must recoil upon ourselves. It puts a stop to our protests against proscription and places a powerful weapon in the hands of our enemies.

"We think it would have been a far better policy, and at the same time a far nobler revenge, if Mr. Halstead had owed his rescue in the house of his friends to those to whom he has so incessantly and so unjustly, but so openly, assailed as the incarnation of all that is intolerant and irreconcilable. Every forgiving action done and every kind and generous word spoken on occasions of trouble and trial by sectional and political antagonists, one to another, tends to heal up the breaches between the people and to bind up the wounds of war, and to make the Union once more a Union of countrymen and brothers. We had hoped that in the case of Mr. Halstead, which afforded a striking opportunity for a display of large and liberal party spirit, there would have been found in the senate senators from the South big enough in brain and heart to do this and brave enough to act upon it, and we can only regret that in this hope we have been disappointed. We are more so because Mr. Halstead is singularly fitted for the position to which he was appointed, and is personally as honorable and clean a man as he is politically a stubborn and implacable fighter.

"We have it from very high authority that if the name of Governor Foraker is not sent to the senate before its adjournment the governor will be despatched as minister to Germany very soon thereafter. If this be so, the democrats of the senate will have helped the malignant republicans of that body to wreak their private revenge upon Mr. Halstead, only to saddle a man like Governor Foraker, whose hatred of the South double discounts any republican in the country, on our diplomatic service. On that issue we have an impression that the gentlemen will find it as little easy to satisfy their own consciences as to explain themselves to public opinion, which in the end is tolerably [illegible] in the matter, and will not give its [illegible] to the conversion of the senate into a den of [illegible]"

THE DENVER BANK ROBBERY

The Man Who Was First Arrested Again Taken Into Custody.

Denver, March 30.—W. H. Clark, the man arrested last evening on the supposition of being the man who robbed the First National bank of $21,000, and who was subsequently released after D. H. BERLIN CABLE LETTER.

A Revolt Threatened Against the Proposed New Penal Code.

[Copyrighted by the Associated Press.]

Berlin, March 30.—A rupture in the government groups arising from disagreement on the press penal law is certain unless the bill is materially modified. The national liberals declare against the bill. The conservatives and free conservatives are ready to submit to any repression, though here there are symptoms of a reaction even among them and the semi-official press. The Cologne Gazette, the Magdebourg Gazette and others who venture to criticise admit that under the law there can be no freedom of discussion and says that the liberals are justified in coalescing to resist the bill. These comments have given rise to reports that the commission of the bundesrath has greatly modified the bill.

It is unlikely that the proposals are being inspired by the emperor, with whom absolute regulation of the press is a pet project. His departure from the usual etiquette of the court to attend the parliamentary dinner at Bismarck's was due to a desire to conciliate the deputies. Even if the leaders are seduced the bulk of the nationalists would not assent to the bill.

It is probable that the government will rely on the center party, thus causing an evolution in party grouping. The Vossische Zeitung predicts a clerico-conservative coalition, a majority of the nationalists joining the progressists and thus forming a liberal opposition strong enough to imperil the passage of the bill.

THE SAMOAN NEWS.

The first heard of the Samoan news was a telegram from London early this morning. Neither the admiralty nor the foreign office received any direct cable advices and were loath to believe the report true. Inquiry at London appeared to confirm the story and there was general consternation. It was not until this afternoon that official telegrams reached the admiralty.

FIVE DOCTORS GRADUATED.

Commencement Exercises of the Medical Department, State University

The Annual Address Delivered by Rev. Arthur J. Brown and the Charge to the Graduates by Dr. C. C. Strong

The medical department of the University of Oregon [illegible] and last night, March [illegible], which [illegible] commencement [illegible] was held [illegible] the fresh [illegible]. Their [illegible] J. F. [illegible] C. W. Cor[illegible] J. W. Hun[illegible] J. [illegible] H. A. W[illegible].

[illegible] was [illegible] a large [illegible] which [illegible] charge [illegible] consisting of [illegible] J. [illegible] D. [illegible] Strong [illegible] his [illegible] congregation [illegible] the faculty, who [illegible] the [illegible] Dr. [illegible] A number of [illegible] faculty were seen to take [illegible] proficient [illegible].

After [illegible] Mr. Clapp [illegible] Rev. Arthur J. Brown, pastor of the [illegible] term, [illegible] began [illegible] address. He spoke for [illegible] all an [illegible] point of [illegible] between the professions [illegible].

SCIENCE [illegible]

"[illegible] there [illegible] govern [illegible] keeping [illegible] just [illegible] days of our [illegible] year [illegible] one.

[illegible] this [illegible] a [illegible] which [illegible] would [illegible] the [illegible] Providence to remove.

[illegible] either mystery story over [illegible] physician [illegible] practically [illegible] There are many men in [illegible] the same [illegible] [illegible] of our forests [illegible] infinitely more [illegible] which is constantly going on around us. Nothing is more beautiful than the close of a well-spent life. Well-spent lives are rare. Most men die before their time. We are bound to be all that we can [illegible] and no man has a right to weaken [illegible] that God gave him.

The [illegible] found another point of sympathy and contact between the two professions in the fact that [illegible] are beset by quacks and charlatans who had nothing [illegible] was a great discovery, which they determined to keep secret, but [illegible] [illegible] by making known what they have found, they have put [illegible] discovery on the market of mankind. Then [illegible] referred to the cunning manner in which these charlatans are advertised so the [illegible] is attracted by glaring headlines telling of some great adventure and only after reading considerable of the article does he discover the dodge. He wished that some one would compose a list of [illegible] words which [illegible] people could use in [illegible] aggravating circumstances.

Rev. Mr. Brown closed his address by scoring society for [illegible] the sin of a man who [illegible] and draws away his skirts for fear of contamination. [illegible] formally welcomed the new doctors to the profession.

THE DEGREES CONFERRED

The graduates next came on the platform and ranged themselves in a semi-circle [illegible] Judge Deady [illegible] presented each his diploma. At the conclusion of the presentation Judge Deady said: "I hope that [illegible] your [illegible] luster upon [illegible]."

[illegible]

The [illegible] to the graduates was delivered by Dr. [illegible], secretary of the faculty, who said:

[illegible] an [illegible] the [illegible] push out of [illegible] selves [illegible].

[illegible] feelings [illegible] shortly [illegible] stand [illegible].

[illegible] It is therefore natural that we are proud [illegible] University of Oregon [illegible] [illegible] gon [illegible] state in its glorious [illegible].

[illegible] that [illegible] University of Oregon [illegible] terms [illegible] graduates [illegible].

[illegible] "[illegible] not only be prepared to [illegible] the [illegible] patient [illegible].

[illegible]

The [illegible] of a physician [illegible] cause the externals to co-operate.

THE OCCASION [illegible]

How often this is true no one knows better than the physician who has been long in the rank doing active duty. How many times a prompt act due to knowledge and courage has saved a life no one, not even the physician himself has an adequate knowledge in this world. The putting of an educated finger on the right spot, the injection of a few drops of general or cardiac stimulants, the use of what the laity consider the cold cruel knife, has often saved a life, adding years of usefulness and comfort. Many a man has died from what appeared to be, and in fact was, an insignificant wound because no one was near him who knew where to put the end of his finger and exert a pressure any five-year-old child is capable of exerting. Many persons have [illegible] there [illegible] would have been saved [illegible] this saving power [illegible] The proper use of [illegible] right [illegible] within a few minutes, changed the scale and for a time averted death.

Again, in the case of drowning [illegible] within the [illegible] the body is taken out [illegible] to death [illegible].

[illegible] constantly prepared and [illegible] have to give [illegible] friends, who [illegible].

Hours of care, hours of anxiety [illegible] constitutional [illegible] gentleman [illegible] said, "I think I could have said [illegible] life."

[illegible]

[illegible] False [illegible] causes that are unknown or but partially understood or are misinterpreted by the physician. Symptoms which seem to spring from known causes [illegible] by unknown conditions [illegible] us to form incorrect opinions. The unknown constitutional conditions of the patient often [illegible] in giving an opinion. There is probably nothing so difficult in medicine as prognosis. Experience [illegible] learner and the possession of experience is a source of great help to the physician. The value of experience is recognized by the laity and led Dr. O. W. Holmes to say:

> Some weeks went by. It was not long to wait,
> [illegible] to call grew frequent on the slate.
> He had, in fact, an ancient, mildewed air—
> A long, gray beard and plenteous lack of hair—
> The musty look that always recommends
> Your good old doctor to his kind friends.
> Talk of your science! After all is said
> There is nothing like a bare and shiny head;
> Age lends the graces that are sure to please—
> Folks want their doctors mouldy, like their cheese.

Yet in spite of all the aid that experience lends it is not as yet based upon a sufficiently scientific basis to render it infallible. As Dr. Holmes says,

> The surest foot may chance at last to slip.

As our scientific knowledge of the causes of disease increases, it will enable us to obtain more correct experience. Yet experience is always fallacious.

JUDGMENT DIFFICULT

I cannot do better than to give you some of the definitions of judgment.

Judgment is that quality of the mind which renders the conduct prudent and prevents us from committing mistakes. When called upon to take any step or act any part we must employ judgment. Judgment, a cool and slow faculty. It is the possession of this faculty that renders one physician a safe counselor while its absence or defect may render another, otherwise equally competent, an unsafe man.

[illegible] In the Hippocratic oath which all students and graduates in medicine in ancient times were required to take, we find these words:

"I reckon him who taught me this art equally dear to me as my own parents." [illegible] Which in this [illegible] I will construe a little more liberally [illegible] who taught me this art [illegible] parent [illegible] the art as dear as [illegible] to [illegible] in holding in respect and [illegible] those who taught you our art is [illegible] commendable and conducive to pleasant [illegible] and prosperous relations. We do not, however, ask this for ourselves alone, but we desire that you shall [illegible] between the faculty and [illegible] respect which [illegible] For the [illegible] which shall [illegible] profession [illegible].

We expect that you will remember that the University of Oregon [illegible] and that therefore the [illegible] of Oregon is behind you [illegible] as long as you [illegible] respect, and therefore the support of your alma mater, [illegible] will be honored [illegible] support [illegible] loyalty. Our [illegible] institution [illegible] imperative that you maintain the highest [illegible] and professional honor in order to [illegible] support [illegible] calls upon you to assist and support [illegible] possible the university and [illegible].

As [illegible] to put on record the motives [illegible] influenced us in organizing a medical school. We felt that the abundant and rich clinical material which we possessed should not be allowed to go to waste. We felt that the time was ripe for the organization of a medical school on a [illegible] non-sectarian basis, and on the highest [illegible] We felt that this was due to the [illegible] of the Northwest, as well as to those who [illegible] commence the study of medicine.

[illegible] we shall build a permanent house [illegible] of the university as easily and as [illegible] will turn the [illegible] dewdrops of [illegible] Upon these general principles the faculty have been as a unit and have thrown [illegible] all the energy of which they were possessed. How well we have done our work and [illegible] we have been to our tenets, time and [illegible] character of our graduates will tell.

As a faculty we shall feel a deep interest in each one of you and shall watch your struggles with solicitude and mark your sure triumph with feelings of sincere pleasure.

And now, in behalf of the faculty, I extend to you the hand of fraternal fellowship, and

FIFTH GRADUATE

May the path of your professional life be marked [illegible] which shall [illegible] as he [illegible] upon the [illegible] which guided the pioneer of Oregon to the fertile homes, in guiding those who follow you to honor and profit.

And to one and all of you we hope that the discoveries that shall be made in our noble profession shall enable us to ward off disease so that death, when it comes to us, shall only be the [illegible] of our bodies. So that this [illegible] shall close our life shall be as natural [illegible] causing us to fall asleep. And that [illegible] shall be cheered by sympathy and [illegible] of a [illegible] host who, having received [illegible] our hands, shall cherish our memories [illegible] their household gods. I know of no more fitting words to close this [illegible] than to again quote from the Hippocratic oath. With purity and holiness I will pass my life and practice my art.

SOCIETY IN GENERAL

Society matters are perforce at a standstill just now. About the only event which drew out society people was the sale of Turkish rugs, and now a great many people are sorry they were not [illegible] bargains were not so wonderful after all, but one [illegible] was not so bad, and the rugs are very pretty if they are not cheap. The Multnomah Tennis Club.

On Saturday afternoon [illegible] the Multnomah Tennis Club [illegible] held in the law offices of Williams & Wood in the First National bank building. The meeting was the regular annual election of officers. None of the lady members of the club were present, but there were sufficient gentlemen to form a quorum. The following officers were elected: President, W. J. Burns; vice-president, Dr. A. D. Bevan; secretary, W. [illegible], and treasurer, J. C. Flanders. [illegible] drews was elected as a committeeman to make up together with the officers of the club the full complement of the executive committee. [illegible] were discussed for putting the grounds on Eighteenth street in condition and erecting a pavilion for the comfort and convenience of the ladies, and a number of other improvements. It was also decided to accept a challenge from the Officers Tennis Club, of Vancouver barracks, by the terms of which a silken banner or pennant is to be made the prize for a series of tournaments to be held during the spring and summer. Last season the Multnomah club displayed little or no activity, but with the present spirit of enthusiasm which seems to permeate the club a lively season seems more than probable. There is a quantity of good material and young blood, which latter element is very essential, for young fellows will go through a harder course of practice than older men. The club, however, has taken the right course to infuse life into its veins by increasing the accommodations for the ladies. No matter, how much individual enthusiasm some of the members possess the tennis season will never be a huge success without the attendance of the lady members and their friends. The game itself is essentially [illegible] and [illegible]

FORTY YEARS MARRIED

State Treasurer Webb and His Wife Celebrate Their Wedding Anniversary at Salem

[illegible] has been [illegible] event in the social realm of Salem [illegible] years so [illegible] twice of [illegible] as that which occurred at the residence of State Treasurer Webb on [illegible] evening. It was the fortieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Webb and the Old Folks' club made it the occasion of a grand surprise to this most worthy and popular couple, who have traveled life's devious road for two score years. [illegible] called upon to [illegible] marriage [illegible] but a [illegible] "Old Folks" [illegible] for [illegible] The early part of the evening was passed in drive whist, in which Mrs. Claud Gatch and Mr. W. Major Willett, Salem's worthy mayor, and Mrs. John [illegible] made a noble effort for the booby prizes and captured them, the former receiving a deck of cards and Mrs. Wright a book on whist, with an appropriate lecture from Mr. F. M. Wall to study up [illegible] the game. A recess was then taken to prepare for a repetition of the ceremony performed forty years before, between Geo. W. Webb and Mary E. McDaniels, which took place at Hannibal, Mo., March 25, 1849. Mr. A. [illegible] Gilbert, who is a genius in the concoction of all schemes of social pleasure, was fixed up for this occasion to represent a minister of the olden time, and the couple being placed in appropriate position, the hump-backed old clergyman entered the room and presented the following document as his authority:

"License to Wed.—This is to certify that George Washington Lafayette Webb has applied to the [illegible] for [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] marry [illegible] Mary E. McDaniels [illegible] with [illegible]. He is to be [illegible] and [illegible] Webb."

THE LAST PAINLESS SLEEP.

Chloroform's Deadly Effect—Frank Burns, a Stone Cutter, Commits Suicide—Coroner's Inquest

Word was sent to the coroner's office yesterday morning that a man named Frank Burns had committed suicide Friday night in his room, at No. 191 Washington street, by taking chloroform. A [illegible] was dispatched to the house and the body was [illegible] to the [illegible], where an inquest was held later in the day.

It was ascertained that Burns, through an immoderate use of liquor and family troubles, had been in a melancholy mood for some time. Friday night in particular he acted very strangely, and kept to his brooding over his [illegible] trouble. Eddie Pretty[illegible], [illegible] (his wife's brother) with whom he [illegible] roomed, stated that Friday night Burns was apparently very much agitated for he paced the [illegible] nervous manner until he (Eddie) went to [illegible] at about 8 o'clock.

After Eddie had retired, Burns left the room and went to a [illegible] drug store after some chloroform. Not having the necessary physician's prescription the drug was refused him. He then procured the chloroform at another place and, returning to his room, retired and inhaled the drug until overcome by the sleep of death.

THE INQUEST

The coroner deeming an inquest necessary, a jury was empaneled at 11 o'clock yesterday forenoon, and an investigation of the death was made.

MRS. BURNS'S TESTIMONY

The first witness sworn was the widow of the deceased, who testified as follows: My name is Annie Burns. I reside at 191 Washington street, and I was the wife of Frank Burns. He was born in Iowa [illegible] and we [illegible] been [illegible] years [illegible] He was a stone cutter [illegible] and we were married about a year and a half ago. He [illegible] been drinking to excess ever since our marriage and he [illegible] was of a quarrelsome disposition when drinking. I never [illegible] he would take his life, but always [illegible] Friday [illegible] he would have to leave or I would [illegible] up the rooms so I left. He had been drinking [illegible] and [illegible].

EDDIE PRETTYMAN

Was the next witness. He testified that he resided with his sister, Mrs. Burns, and [illegible] testified to [illegible] the witness [illegible] Friday night. He [illegible] about the room and I went to bed at 8 o'clock. He had been drinking and [illegible] hours from me, then went out and was [illegible] He told me he [illegible] I went to sleep then, and when I awoke this morning I [illegible] to Mrs. [illegible] that the [illegible] I [illegible] to [illegible] him [illegible] asked him whether he had taken anything [illegible] [illegible]

W. [illegible] Thompson, being sworn, stated that the deceased came to his drug store to-day [illegible] could on Friday night and asked for some chloroform. The drug was refused him because he had no order from a physician.

H. [illegible] Trowell, the druggist who sold Burns the chloroform, testified that the drug was sold by him Friday night between 8 and 9 o'clock.

Burns got the chloroform for the toothache, which he claimed was giving him a great deal of trouble. [illegible] to have the tooth pulled, but [illegible] stated that he could obtain relief from chloroform. [illegible] the [illegible] cents worth. I did not think that he was drunk."

THE JURY'S VERDICT

The jury returned a verdict as follows: "We, the jury, find that the deceased, Frank Burns, was [illegible] years old, married and a native of Iowa. That he came to his death from an inhalation of chloroform for the purpose of suicide on the 29th of March, 1889."

The body is still at the morgue awaiting orders from his relatives in San Francisco. His wife telegraphed immediately after the suicide was discovered and the probability is that the remains will be shipped to California for burial.

SOL SMITH RUSSELL.

How the Quaint Comedian Bade Good-bye to the Stage.

The Story of "A Poor Relation"—The Eminent Artist's Engagement in Portland the Present Week.

"Russell Boynton Mfg. Co.—Mfrs. of steam heating apparatus, plumbers and gasfitters' supplies—[illegible] Smith Russell, president." Thus runs a line in the Minneapolis Directory. It seems strange to see this well known name thus set down in a commercial way—a name that carries with it all the euphony of refined fun, a name whose very sound brings up thoughts of many a hearty laugh, memories of many a night of pure delight at the theater. Two years ago the famous comedian decided to bid good-bye to the stage, and the remonstrances of friends, the advice of men of business, the protests of the public were all in vain. He had made for himself a competence, being quoted at a quarter of a million. He had erected a lovely, almost palatial, home near the falls of Minnehaha, and he was determined to settle down to commercial pursuits and live a life which he fondly fancied would entirely agree with his modest tastes and desires. Accordingly he invested in a large manufacturing enterprise, and for one brief summer sat at the head of the great enterprise. For a month or two all went swimmingly with the famous comedian, but bye-and-bye the counting room officials noticed that he took less and less interest in the columns of figures and the huge bills and fat receipts which were submitted to him, and after a while the president's desk was filled with volumes of history, poetry, reminiscences of the stage, etc.

One day the secretary of the concern came to him and asked:

"Mr. Russell, what do you think of Burton?"

"Think of Burton?" echoed Sol. "Why I think he was one of the greatest of comedians. It is true that the American people never—"

"Why," interrupted the secretary, "I never knew that Burton was on the stage. I certainly should never have allowed him to run such a bill—"

"Of whom are you talking, man?" asked Russell.

"Why of Burton, the Hennepin avenue plumber, of course."

A light dawned on both the gentlemen at once and President Russell went out for a drive in the open air.

After Mr. Russell had been in "retirement" for about four months Manager Fred G. Berger, with whom the great comedian had been associated for nearly a quarter of a century, appeared on the scene with a new comedy entitled "Bewitched" it was so much better than any of the farce comedies in which Mr. Russell had been able to secure [illegible] the comedian was [illegible] make another tour and before that was completed Edward E. Kidder, the author of "Bewitched" had finished "A Poor Relation," a genuine legitimate comedy, just such a one as the inimitable [illegible] had been striving to secure for years. The play was produced in Chicago, where Mr. Russell created a sensation in the title role, and he has played it continuously this season with such success that he has permanently given up all thoughts of retiring from the stage.

And the play-going public everywhere is delighted.

And that is why Portland people are given the opportunity of seeing this rare genius again.

Mr. Russell is one of the few refined comedians of the stage. One of the few who appeals to the hearts and the minds, not [illegible]. The [illegible] laughs with him—aye and if need be weeps with him, too, while the [illegible] at him. His humor is pure and wholesome, and his fun quaint and refined.

Mr. Russell supported by an excellent company begins a week's engagement at the New Park theater to-morrow night. It is to be [illegible] that every seat in the theater will be [illegible] to the [illegible] of this old favorite. He will present for the first four nights and at the Saturday matinee his masterpiece, "A Poor Relation," and on Friday and Saturday evenings his [illegible] "Bewitched," in which the quaint genius sings a number of new songs as well as many of the old favorites.

The story of "A Poor Relation" is given below:

The first act introduces Noah Vale and the [illegible] Sep and Patch at the home of the wealthy manufacturer whose daughter Dolly brings [illegible] into the house. Vale has come there to sell [illegible] invention. He is in a starving condition, and while alone in the drawing room faints from hunger. His plans are stolen by Sterrett, the villainous partner of [illegible] Dolly is accused of the theft and circumstances point toward her as the guilty one. Out of gratitude Vale declares that he had no plans, so could not have been robbed. He [illegible] about it all. The curtain falls on a splendid climax.

Act two shows the miserable home of Noah and the young children and introduces Scallops, a bright soubrette character. Merriment and misery are at their height when Sterrett appears and enlists Vale's sympathies, only to betray them. Vale is engaged by Sterrett as foreman in the factory to serve his own purposes. Dolly discovers Vale's miserable abode, and, coming secretly to help him, is surprised by her father at the step, and [illegible] glad of a chance to [illegible] This is averted by Sterrett, who proposes [illegible] is accepted by Dolly, for whom Vale is [illegible] for a strong effect.

Act three shows the factory, and the [illegible] rival of the mother of the two children. [illegible] proves to be Sterrett's deceit [illegible] and [illegible] him to return to Vale the plans of his invention. Dolly declares to Sterrett she has no [illegible] will marry him, which declaration is overheard by Mrs. Sterrett, who faints. [illegible] exciting climax.

Act four shows Vale's rise to fortune, his love for Dolly and his exposure of Sterrett's villainy in a most effective and novel way. Vale and Dolly are married and so are Scallops and her admirer when the curtain falls on a happy scene.

Special Meeting of the School Board—An Addition to the Failing School at a Cost of $7100

A special meeting of the school board was called yesterday afternoon at [illegible] in the [illegible] of the Commercial National bank. There were present President D. P. Thompson, Clerk E. W. Allen, City Superintendent [illegible], Miss Sabin, and Directors [illegible] and [illegible].

The meeting was called to order shortly after [illegible] by the president.

[illegible] object [illegible] Mr. [illegible] addition [illegible].

[illegible] Mr. Thompson [illegible] submitted for the consideration of the board two drawings [illegible] one for a [illegible] four-room addition to cost $[illegible] was recommended by the committee.

On motion of Mr. [illegible] the [illegible] of the building committee with the [illegible] a four-room addition was adopted. [illegible] to have plans drawn with such alterations [illegible].

In order to shorten the [illegible] that the [illegible] bids be dispensed with until the next regular meeting [illegible].

A communication was received from Miss H. A. Salisbury [illegible] of the Failing school. Miss Salisbury [illegible] a more lucrative position [illegible], notwithstanding her [illegible] to resign her position in that school. She accordingly sent in her resignation, to take effect April [illegible].

On motion of Mr. [illegible] Miss Saulsbury's resignation was accepted and placed on file. The question then arose as to who should fill the vacancy. Acting upon Mr. Thompson's suggestion Miss Sabin was authorized to hire a teacher to fill the vacancy until the expiration of Miss Saulsbury's term.

Clerk of the board, E. W. Allen, stated that at the last meeting he was authorized to purchase a map, its cost not to exceed $10. He had been examining different maps, but could find nothing satisfactory for that money. Mr. Therkelsen thereupon made a motion authorizing Mr. Allen to [illegible] not to exceed [illegible]. No further [illegible] the meeting adjourned.

THE ALTERATIONS

The [illegible] school will be built [illegible] present school building [illegible] accommodations for [illegible] feet [illegible] by 34 [illegible] side of [illegible] entrance into the [illegible] of one exit on the [illegible] there will be two exits [illegible] on the west side of the [illegible] the stairway is to be eight feet [illegible] fifth, or sixth [illegible].

In an informal discussion of the plans before the opening of the meeting Miss Sabin took special pains to impress upon the building committee the [illegible] of having roomy halls and wide exits. This she maintained, was one of the greatest safeguards in case of fire. Her suggestions were very [illegible], owing to her experience with schools and school buildings, respectful consideration will be accorded them.

PORTLAND, SUNDAY, MARCH 31

Chickens $7 per dozen in this market and yet farmers are not happy. The reason of this is that they have none to sell.

The storm at Samoa should end the controversy there between the United States and Germany. It has annihilated the naval forces of both countries, and given both a good opportunity to quit.

Albany is going ahead with its woolen mill with a promptness and energy that promises success to the enterprise. The subsidy and the water power have been secured, and homemade blankets from the Albany mills will be on the market in time for next winter's use.

It might not be just to call the president of the Denver bank who allowed himself to be robbed a poltroon, yet he certainly is a man of little force and no presence of mind. Quite unmanned by the situation he was incapable—though in the presence of twelve or fifteen men—of making an attempt to foil the robber. It will hardly do for robbers to build their expectations on meeting that kind of a bank president every time.

During six weeks prior to March 4 the Cleveland administration organized a brigade of forlorn hope by the appointment of over 1000 postmasters, with the intention of foisting them upon the republican administration. The brigade did not go into active service. It was not found necessary, nor indeed deemed advisable to use any more democratic material for postmasters at present, and the commissions of the anxious 1000 were withheld.

The Benton Leader complains that Benton county is not receiving its share of the immigration now pouring into the state. The share of immigration to which any county is entitled is the number of people that it can secure by offering sufficient inducement to them to come and settle within its borders. The paper quoted says that the failure of home-seekers to reach that locality is not because it lacks advantages, but because there is no effort made to attract immigrants. In short, that "not a cent has been expended to this end by anybody." If the people are aware of their shortcomings in this regard the most sensible thing they can do is to correct them. Reproach, even if it is self reproach, is not a specially attractive quality.

The job of Alexander of Russia, though exceedingly remunerative, has its little drawbacks. Another discovery has been made of a gigantic plot existing throughout the empire for a new series of attempts upon his life. With a possible bomb at every turn in his pathway it looks like the czar of all the Russias would yet be driven through generous self pity to throw up his hands and meekly take the dose of dynamite that is being so industriously compounded for him. Life under the conditions that surround him must be even more wearisome than that of the stranded officeseeker in Washington, whose expenses notwithstanding the depleted state of his purse go steadily on and whose hopes seem each day farther from realization.

A Corvallis paper points with pride to the public spirit displayed by the citizens of Benton county in the construction of the substantial and commodious court house at that place. It says: "Tumble down people go to tumble down places. Progressive people go to progressive places." This is not intended as a criticism on Polk county, where vain attempts are being made to induce the county court to supplant a pioneer building that has done duty as a court house and another that has failed in its duty as a jail by public buildings more in accordance with the spirit of progress that is abroad in the land. But it will no doubt be resented by the latter as a vainglorious boast calculated to disparage the enterprise of near neighbors.

A writer in the Contemporary Review shows up in exhaustive detail how vast sums of money were squandered in promotion of the Panama canal. The writer shows that the only persons who have saved themselves from complete and irretrievable loss are Count de Lesseps himself, his co-conspirators, and certain anonymous persons and corporations. These mysterious persons and corporations had it seems entered into certain engagements with the ex-president, director and his secret syndicate, under whose provisions the vast sums that have been applied and misapplied to the work have been expended. The author of the article in the Contemporary Review particularly mentions the fact that $7,000,000 was frittered away in preliminary expenses, and that this sum was paid to parties in the United States for what valuable consideration or for what services rendered to the Panama Canal Company [illegible]. Probably nobody except De Lesseps and the interested parties will ever know what became of the money. Of course the proceeding was nothing less than robbery, downright robbery of the shareholder.

Either the thief who carried away with all the cash he wanted from the First National bank of Denver Friday was an unusually dangerous man, or the president of the bank who uncovered up the money was an unusually timid one. That so bold a robbery could be successfully accomplished in broad daylight and the thief escape even temporarily is [illegible] believed. He will doubtless be caught [illegible] time [illegible] if he [illegible] half a dozen men before he is captured. There is a good deal in a case of this kind in the criminal having done damage enough. A man who attempts to [illegible] off with a few dollars that he had taken [illegible] further [illegible] man would [illegible] become enthroned in public sympathy, but he who sets his stakes high and shoots to the mark bespeaks for himself consideration that will leave no effort untried in his behalf. It is the common version, in everyday prose, of the old story told in rhyme that embellished the reading books of our childhood, beginning with the boy's question: How big was Alexander?

THE WRECK AT APIA

The hurricane in Samoan waters, by which three German and two United States ships of war and a number of merchant men were wrecked, was one of the most appalling marine disasters of modern times. The report was at first considered highly sensational, but it was promptly verified by details that leave no doubt of its truth. The recent diplomatic troubles between the two nations mentioned in regard to the commerce of the Samoan islands has awakened a public interest on both sides of the water, and in a sense public expectation of an encounter between the vessels that had been ordered to Apia. But while the elements always hold the possible in the way of disaster in store, that which has happened to these vessels representing national authority and interest was not reckoned in the line of probability, and its record reads like a romance woven to create a sensation and to set telegraph wires and types clicking all over the world to gratify a taste for the marvelous.

The loss of life caused by the tempest that played such havoc with the passively hostile vessels, was large. The exact number of men sacrificed to the furys of the wind and waves is not known, but in a storm that mercilessly beat ships to pieces, the loss of life must be great. The government will doubtless devise means to relieve the surviving sailors wrecked in its service as soon as possible, and fit out other vessels to support the dignity of the United States and enforce its treaty regulations in regard to Samoa.

THE CRIME CONFESSED

In Alabama a row has broken out between democratic factions through which light is let in on the processes by which they fix elections. The row has its origin in the apportionment of delegates to the democratic state convention. In certain counties where the colored population predominates great majorities have been returned for the democratic candidates. These majorities are notoriously fraudulent, and democrats in other counties object to the use of this fraudulent return as a basis of apportionment for delegates. Thus a county in which the democratic vote actually cast could not exceed 600, as most of the population is colored—is made to return over 3000 democratic votes, and so the democrats in counties where the white vote preponderates object to having the fraudulently returned votes used in the estimate for basis of representation in convention, though they are quite willing to have them used in swelling a false democratic majority in elections.

The quarrel has led to confession by the opposing democratic organs of the state of the guilt of their party in the fraudulent conduct of elections, but after all it is only a confession of crimes long notorious and will hardly lead to abandonment of them. It is well, however, to keep the record of these crimes before the country, so that the government of the United States may not again be controlled by them as it was from March, 1885, to March, 1889.

A MISTAKEN POLICY.

Some days ago THE OREGONIAN set forth and commented on the fact that houses are greatly wanted in Portland. It is certain that if 1000 dwellings could be erected within two months they would all be taken, and it is probable that if 2000 were supplied they would be occupied before the close of the summer.

A good deal of building is going on, but not enough. There is some delay for want of materials, but this want will soon be supplied. A greater drawback is want of labor. Contractors and builders hesitate, because they cannot be sure of obtaining labor to carry out their undertakings. Hence they proceed cautiously, and many owners of lots who would build at once hold back under the fear that they would be involved in too much cost and delay.

A year ago a circular was widely published purporting to have emanated from a body of organized workmen here and addressed to similar bodies in the Eastern states, warning all working people not to come to this region, alleging as a reason that there was not work enough for those now here. THE OREGONIAN is told that a similar document has been issued this month and sent off to labor unions throughout the country. This ill-advised work tends greatly to retard the growth of Portland and the development of the Northwest. The allegation that more workingmen are not wanted here and that there would be no employment for more is not true. It is grossly false, and the circulation of the falsehood is a blow at the progress and prosperity of the country.

Eastern working people ought to be informed that wages in every line of industry pursued here are much higher than at the East, and that there is a demand for many more workers than are now here. It is true that as manufactures are little developed here there is not the same demand for labor in special lines as at the East, but we have great need of men in all branches of house building and in the work of providing materials therefor. And to those who do not come to work for wages in the trades but wish to make homes on the lands of the Northwest it may be said that there is room for hundreds of thousands.

The short sighted and selfish policy of trying to keep mechanics away from Portland and the other cities and towns of the Northwest should be abandoned. The working people here have nothing to gain but much to lose by it. The way to make more work in the country is to favor and support the conditions necessary to broadening and extending our industries. In a new and growing country like this the more there is done the more there will be to do; each new undertaking opens the way rapidly to others, and prosperity comes by multiplying industries. The more workers there are up to the limit of demand the better for all. Stagnation may result from scarcity of labor as well as from scarcity of money, and workingmen now here would have more work and steadier work if there were a full supply of labor, as builders and others could push ahead with their undertakings in confidence of being able to carry out their plans. There is no greater mistake than the supposition that in a new country like ours, where everything awaits development, a reinforcement to labor will hurt the cause of labor. The fact is precisely the reverse.

THE EVANGELICAL SYMPOSIUM

Last Sunday evening Hon. George H. Williams delivered at Trinity church the first of what are described as a series of lectures from laymen on "The Evidences of the Christian Religion." Bishop Morris in his introductory address, among other things said:

> There seems just now a sort of popular revival of the old heresies that were put to sleep or slain to death a thousand years ago, and books and newspapers are seeking to uproot that which is the very foundation of our hopes, robbing this message of good things of its very heart and kernel, and constantly offering us a gospel stripped of what they call its relics of bigotry and myths of the ages incorporated into the genuine story of Jesus and his apostles. That is, they would rid the gospel and the nature and character of Christ of every supernatural element and of every claim to divinity, making him a mere man like themselves.

With all due respect to Bishop Morris we submit that this is not a full or fair statement of the case. Bishop Morris undoubtedly knows that the elimination of supernaturalism from the history of Jesus and the rejection of the dogmatic theology, or rather theological metaphysics nailed to the cross of Christ by mediæval churchmen, did not begin in the books and newspapers of recent date, nor has it even been absent from the bosom of the church itself. So far is the present revolt from being "a popular revival of old heresies put to sleep or slain to death a thousand years ago," that the present revolt is but the logical ultimate of Luther's revolt from Rome. The moment the Protestant idea of the right of private construction and interpretation of the Scriptures as separated from the doctrine of absolute blind obedience to the spiritual authority and guidance of the church of Rome in all matters of faith and morals, had won the day, that moment rationalism began its fight against supernaturalism and superstition within the church. Luther's principles had greater range than he knew or intended, and the battle to-day between Christianity and micro supernaturalism and mediæval theology is nothing but the noise of the same bugle blown upon by Luther and passed like other torches of liberty from one stronghold to another from generation to generation. Not out of books and newspapers chiefly has come this so called recent revolt. It has come out of the church itself, and it is to-day within the church speaking in no uncertain tone. Out of the bosom of the Catholic church came Huss, Jerome of Prague, Zwingli, Wyclif, Luther, Servetus, Melancthon, Savonarola and Bruno. The church of Rome burned Huss and Jerome of Prague, and would if they could have burned Luther and Calvin; but on the other hand Luther and Calvin, who builded better than they knew, were glad when Zwingli fell in battle and Servetus was burned at the stake.

The point is that since the reformation there has been an irrepressible conflict within the Protestant church between those who believe with Bishop Morris that the supernaturalism and theology attached by priests to Christianity are its very heart and kernel, and those who believe that they are but the barnacles that impede the progress of the good ship of Christian humanity in human thought and action. This evolution and elimination has been steadily going on since Luther's day, and for Bishop Morris to assert that this irrepressible conflict is nothing but the resurrection by books and newspapers of heresies put to sleep or slain a thousand years ago is scarcely creditable to his candor. The bishop knows that the popular interest excited by the publication of "Robert Elsmere" no more stands for the resurrection of dead heresies than the publication of Uncle Tom's Cabin stood for the resurrection of a dead crime against human nature in its deliverance of slavery. He knows that the theory of the supernatural origin of Christ and faith in his miracles, has not only been rejected by such deists of the last century as Voltaire, Hume, Gibbon, Franklin and Jefferson, but he knows that within our century it has been rejected by the Unitarian denomination speaking by the mouths of Channing, Emerson, Parker, James Freeman Clarke, Rev. Dr. Bartol, Oliver Wendell Holmes, James Russell Lowell, Rev. Dr. Hedge and Rev. Dr. James Martineau. Moreover, it has been rejected by several of the most eminent clergymen of the Church of England; it is repudiated to-day by Rev. Dr. Heber Newton and Rev. Dr. Rylance, of Bishop Morris's church; it is rejected by Rev. Dr. Thomas, of the Methodist church, by Professor David Swing, by Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, of Plymouth church, and by Robert Collyer, and it is rejected by nearly every man of science, both in England and America.

Rev. Dr. James Freeman Clarke states correctly the evolution of Christianity when he says: "Jewish monotheism grew out of polytheism; Christianity and Mohammedanism out of Judaism; Buddhism out of Brahminism; Protestant Christianity out of the Roman Catholic church." And he might have added that Unitarianism grew out of orthodox Protestantism, and now free religion out of Unitarianism. Dr. Clarke says that all these changes are modifications of a preceding system by individual activity, the activity of Moses, Jesus, Mohammed, Luther, Channing, Parker, Frothingham.

The curious fact in all this matter is that Rev. Dr. M. J. Savage and Rev. Dr. Edward E. Hale, of Boston, answer the question, "What is the matter with our churches?" by confessing that the persistence of the pulpit in preaching the outworn, obsolete creed of supernaturalism as the "very heart and kernel of Christianity," long after the people have rejected it, explains the waning influence of the pulpit and the irreverence of the pews. Dr. Savage says:

> Ask now the question why the churches have so slight a hold on the faith and reverence of men. Why do so many thousands neglect them? Why do so many of the best men and women feel that they are no longer essential to their highest and noblest life? We might as well face the fact—the churches might as well face it—that free minded, well informed people no longer believe in any "fall of man." What follows? Why this follows as inevitably as day follows night—that the very cornerstone of the popular theology has crumbled and that the whole superstructure totters to its fall. If man is not fallen, then he is not lost, and, in that case, he does not need to be "saved." Take away the fall of man and there is no need of the scheme of redemption, no need of a supernaturally inspired revelation, no need of an incarnation, no need of a supernatural or infallible church, no need of a trinity, no old time heaven for the chosen few, no endless hell for the doomed many. All these doctrines found their reason in the supposed fall, and with it they pass away.
> And yet we are presented with the strange spectacle of hundreds, perhaps thousands of ministers in all the different churches who—in private at least—will frankly confess that they share the belief of all intelligent men in the antiquity and the slow and gradual development of the race from the lowest beginnings. They believe in no Genesis story of either Eden or fall. And yet they go on preaching and administering the sacraments as if nothing had happened. Their one official business is to proclaim a loss that does not exist and offer a salvation that is not needed. They know this, and confess it, and—keep on doing it!

And yet a good Protestant Christian bishop, with his Sunday evening symposium, where respectable laymen discuss the "Evidences of Christianity," expects to persuade those who are not with us to come to church by preaching the absurd doctrine of Christian supernaturalism, which has no more legs to stand upon than the mythology of the Greeks or the Norsemen. If the faith delivered through the symposium rests on historical proofs, any well read intelligent man is as competent as his brother laymen, and if belief in supernaturalism and miracles rests on faith and intuitions, why no man can substitute his faith or his intuitions for the rational judgment of another man. In a matter of law a doctor would accept Judge Williams's opinion, and in a matter of medicine Judge Williams would trust his doctor, but in a matter of faith Judge Williams is no more law to the doctor than the doctor is law to the lawyer, and so of this Sunday evening symposium we may inquire: What good is the Sunday evening symposium in Portland more than Channing, Huxley, Darwin, Emerson, Holmes, Arnold and Lowell, or does it expect to obscure the weakness of its case in the dust that it is always easy to raise by threshing old straw?

GOOD ADVICE.
If you are thinking of buying a lot on which to build a home, or you of small means who wish to speculate and feel absolutely certain of a quick and steady advance in value will make a great mistake if you do not go out and look at the ADDITION to SUNNYSIDE before making your purchase. Do not confuse the ADDITION to Sunnyside with any other of similar name, for it is superior to any and all others is the verdict of everyone who has seen it. It has the following advantages over any and all suburban property on the market. LOTS ARE ALL large, many of them 137 feet in depth, immediately between TWO Motor lines—fare 5 cents into the heart of Portland and only ten minutes' time. There is not a low or bad lying lot in the whole tract. Much of it is finely fruited. Is sold on as easy terms as any first-class property on the market. The Motor line will take you to within 200 yards of the property. Go and see it to-day. H. D. McGUIRE & CO.,
1230 Fourth St., East Portland,
Sole Agents.

[illegible]
This property lies 2½ miles southwest of Portland and immediately adjoining WEST PORTLAND to the north, where lots sell for $100 each, and is nearer Portland.
The land is all level and the character of the soil is excellent.
It is well watered by a running stream and two living springs, together with a number of small brooks and springs.
The timber on same makes it doubly valuable, as it furnishes an abundant supply of fuel and fencing.
The property is accessible from Portland by county roads, one of which passes directly through one portion, and the proposed motor line, which will positively be built very soon, will run directly past and adjoin this property.
C. & G. Park consists of 40 acres divided into twenty 2 acre tracts, each tract facing a road, thus making each tract independent of the other.
Price of tracts, $260 per acre, an acre consisting of eight lots 50x100 feet each, which makes each tract of two acres cost $520.
Terms $200 cash, balance on very easy payments. Maps and plats may be seen at our office, or will be mailed on application.

—AND—
NO REWARD IS OFFERED
Because None Can Help Us.
This will soon be the WAIL and MOAN of HUNDREDS of PEOPLE in this city as they recount the golden opportunities which they have lost to select a lot or two in Highland or Maegly Highland. I knew they were the best buys on this market, but I had no idea they would be sold so quick, will be the excuse offered. Now, this has not yet happened. BUT IT WILL HAPPEN as SURE as the sun rises and sets, because these lots ARE GOING TO BE SOLD and they are the BEST BUYS on this market. They have the best view, ventilation and drainage to be found here on level ground, consequently they are the most desirable home sites. A LOT there in the NEAR FUTURE WILL SELL FOR MORE MONEY than any residence lots have ever sold for in the city of Portland. They are now being sold at low price, easy terms, no interest. See

CHAPTER XI.

When Mr. Byrne returned from Merle's plateau that afternoon leading by the ear his son and heir, and remonstrating with the lad on the morbid taste for horrors which he displayed, the honorable gentleman had a double object in view. He wished first to remove his boy from temptation, and he was also anxious to see that the bartender who presided at the Spread Eagle was alert and ready, for Mr. Byrne expected a large trade in the evening. It was within his experience that any excitement or unusual occurrence had a tendency to promote thirst in San Pablo, and long as he had resided there he had never seen stronger symptoms of excitement in the village than he had seen that day.

As they passed the church Mr. Byrne yielded to young Pat's entreaties to let go his ear.

[illegible]

"Every Day" Pet turned on Mr. [illegible]

[illegible] your own paper [illegible]

The Hon. [illegible]'s position was not easy. [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] "What time does the gentleman arrive?" inquired [illegible]

"He's coming over from San Miguel on [illegible] He'll be here some time [illegible] on the lookout for him."

By this time the saloon was crowded. It was growing dark, and lamps were lighted and hung in front of broad reflectors. The room looked cheerful and animated and contrasted pleasantly with the gathering darkness outside. Mr. Byrne had not been deceived in his forecast. San Pablo was all astir; the plaza was growing more crowded every moment, and the people passed the

"I [illegible] what they're going to [illegible]"

[illegible]

"Why not?" asked [illegible]

"Because [illegible] not a word."

"Not a word then since you don't want me to. But, Miss Lucy, where are you going?"

"I'm going up to the church to see father."

"But aren't you scared? It's dreadful dark —and—"

"Please do as I ask you, won't you, Pat?"

"All right, Miss Lucy. You can count on me every time," answered the boy, starting toward the hotel.

A wild cheer from the crowd hailed the

HAUNTED OR WHAT?

BY W. H. ROSS.

(Copyrighted, 1889, [illegible])

The [illegible] was an [illegible] craft. A two-masted schooner of [illegible] tons register, built at Bath, Maine. She was one of the trimmest and fastest vessels ever launched in the Pine Tree State. But for all that she never made a dollar for her owners, or more than a bare living for Captain Sam Stone, who sailed her from the day she left the stocks until she went ashore five years later on the bar off Chatham. Her ill luck began on her first voyage from Portland to Fernandina, when she lost the mate overboard and never knew where at. She was haunted, or if not haunted, pursued by an intangible something that made her shunned by seamen and [illegible]. It was my ill fate to sail as mate on the [illegible] on her final voyage. I had been [illegible] about Portland [illegible] for two months and was penniless, and [illegible]

[illegible]

"Cap'n," said I, "why don't you leave this vessel?"

"Leave the vessel!" repeated he slowly, "why, I can't [illegible] What [illegible]"

[illegible]

[illegible] when I saw or felt something that literally made my hair stand on end, my heart feel like a lump of ice, and the blood recede from my cheeks like the ebbing tide in the Bay of Fundy. I say something, for I don't know what it was, nor have I ever been able to give it a form even in my own mind, much less describe

---

THE ALPINE ICE COMPANY

[illegible] From Mount Hood to Portland.

[illegible]

I deem it not best to enter fully into the details of this plan, [illegible] the well-known selfishness of business men should lead them to imitate [illegible] counter [illegible] project that promised excellent dividends to the investors.

Recounting the success of the distinguished Mr. Henry Villard in getting money out of Portland, I set about studying his system, and I called into council one of his very apt disciples, who has lately become eminent as a follower of the great railroad king in the [illegible] pretty scheme known as the [illegible] Sugar Refining Company.

With such a leader in enterprise and such adroit counsel I organized a corporation known as the Alpine Ice Company, with a paid-up capital of $5,000,000, of which I took the controlling part, namely, $[illegible],000,000, in exchange for my inventions, and was elected president of the company, a near and dear relative of mine being at the same time chosen secretary and treasurer.

I must perhaps be said that a "blind pool" was formed for the subscribers paid in the balance of the stock amounting to $2,000,000, [illegible] and instructed the president to employ a civil engineer at a salary of $1,000 per month. Feeling the [illegible] in the executive department, and for other reasons which modesty [illegible] forbids me to mention, the [illegible] the collective head of the [illegible]

[illegible]

The elements of this volume I have [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] subtend that distance and carry a practicable load, the thing was done.

Evidently my new amalgum steal was the article.

First I directed the treasurer to pay to the chief engineer one year's salary, in order

[illegible] free from all [illegible] the future he might [illegible] more completely [illegible] president, drew [illegible]

[illegible] might be more [illegible] the interests of the [illegible] quarters house on Mount [illegible] for which I paid [illegible] treasury, but which [illegible] person that I [illegible] the company's accounts [illegible] made the property over [illegible] myself more [illegible] scientific labors for the [illegible] protection against [illegible] private secretary [illegible] at a salary of $5000 [illegible] her to work [illegible] full hour each day; for [illegible] she occupied the [illegible] chief engineer and [illegible] She immediately [illegible] both positions, and [illegible] her duties without [illegible] common cares of life [illegible]

After the purchase of furniture, plate, and [illegible] of convenience as [illegible] conduct of a [illegible] $2,300,000 left [illegible] I at once purchased [illegible] which were [illegible] at the snow line of [illegible] fastening on Mount [illegible] I suspended [illegible] ten feet wide and [illegible]

[illegible] of some [illegible] of material, [illegible] the secretary [illegible] that 5,000 [illegible] have cost but [illegible] $50. I should [illegible] earned he had [illegible] obtained [illegible] relative, and not [illegible] company. Recognizing the [illegible] interfere [illegible] with much [illegible] over an act which [illegible] permitted to [illegible] and somewhat [illegible]

[illegible] complications of [illegible] organized a construction [illegible] I let the contract [illegible] for the sum of [illegible] was payable in [illegible] the bonds of the company [illegible] more complete protection [illegible] be elected president of the [illegible] superintendent of construction.

The stockholders of the A. I. C. will [illegible] I have practiced [illegible] myself always in the [illegible] that I might be ready at every turn to make this useful and humane enterprise a financial and engineering success.

Finally the work was completed and the [illegible] the world has ever seen extended from the base of the Mount Hood glacier to the summit of Mount Tabor, where it terminated over an immense [illegible] in the [illegible]

The intention was to use electric motors for cutting up the enormous ice field, and keep a continual and unending current of ice blocks [illegible] 10 feet wide and 15 [illegible]

[illegible] at the [illegible] with such a [illegible] quietly [illegible] Whatever it [illegible] had been sent [illegible] I judged it [illegible] the body of [illegible] general [illegible] long a [illegible] seemed [illegible] presented [illegible] appearance [illegible] not [illegible] have a coat of [illegible] hedge hog [illegible] to say [illegible] in the first [illegible] and fell [illegible] observation along [illegible] more such bodies [illegible]

[illegible] Chinamen [illegible] give them [illegible]

[illegible] called their [illegible] crowns of [illegible] cotton [illegible] to their [illegible] they stood [illegible] hands under [illegible] with light [illegible] from [illegible] Chinamen [illegible] such [illegible] called [illegible]

To reassure [illegible] took hold of one of these [illegible] after it had been plentifully deluged and [illegible] battery and then directed them to bear them off to the office, where I wished to examine them.

As the men lifted at each end of the [illegible] which till [illegible] had been a rigid [illegible]

[illegible] wide and bent in the middle [illegible] they raised their [illegible] distance [illegible] two feet from the ground [illegible] forth from the midst [illegible] so frightened [illegible] they broke [illegible] Tabor [illegible] with his trident [illegible] them since.

[illegible] sense [illegible] the [illegible] or more off the [illegible] I could see [illegible] of the [illegible] the [illegible] of spiders [illegible] secured [illegible] I peered [illegible] reached the [illegible] drew [illegible] this before it [illegible] globe [illegible]

[illegible] I think [illegible] at once [illegible] what [illegible] the other [illegible] voice [illegible] I am dying [illegible]

[illegible] was a [illegible] to me [illegible] mass of spheres [illegible] understood that [illegible] were [illegible] set them at work [illegible] had them [illegible] of the length [illegible] them off [illegible] between the [illegible] the head [illegible] stretched [illegible] time [illegible] to devote [illegible] from [illegible] that I might [illegible] the case appeared [illegible]

[illegible] I went down to my quarters [illegible] and sent [illegible] letters [illegible] flour and [illegible] the same time dispatched a messenger [illegible] back to Portland for [illegible] physician. Then I [illegible] Mount Tabor [illegible] from the top of the [illegible]

[illegible] splintered [illegible] at work.

Nor [illegible] I see any evidence that [illegible] would ever exist [illegible] Mount Tabor [illegible]

[illegible] at each end of the stick [illegible] had been a rigid log, it appeared flexible and bent in the middle, and when they raised their ends a distance of about two feet from the ground a fearful groan came forth from the midst of the splintery mass which so frightened Ah Jack and Tom Boy that they broke and ran down the west side of Mount Tabor as if the devil were pursuing them with his trident and I have never seen them since

Not being quite sure of my senses I took a branch of one of the bifurcations in my hand and raised it a foot or more off the ground when again we heard a groan as if from human lungs I could see nothing however at the forward end of the stick save the same continuous cluster of splinters I got down close to the body and listened I could hear a decided attempt to articulate A voice within the splinters seemed to say in gasps "Oh! Oh!" I peered carefully through the spinous integument along the side and thus examining reached the minor bifurcation at the rear end of the log that is to say the end which had made the journey on the rear of the log in coming through the chute Here a circumstance drew my attention In the apex of this bifurcation was a round ball or globe and the limbs grew a foot beyond it though they seemed to originate in the log near what I may call the base of the ball or globe Looking carefully between the climbs I discovered a dark spot as large I think as the palm of my hand which I at once touched and felt in my grasp what appeared to be human hair on a warm scalp I pulled at it with some violence when the limbs near me and the others also shook violently and a voice cried, "Unpin me! For God's sake unpin me! I am dying" and with a groan became silent again

I saw it all, here was a human body in some manner to me as yet inconceivable impaled on a mass of splinters However it will be understood that I lost no time in speculations Four men were standing by me and I set them at work pulling out these splinters, and bade them be careful to pull in the direction of their length in order to avoid breaking them off I saw that the ball or globe between the minor limbs was undoubtedly the head on each side of which were the arms stretched upward I therefore directed one man to devote himself to removing splinters from the head, especially the face so that I might administer such draughts as the case appeared to need of stimulant or opiate or other remedy

Meantime I went down to my quarters for more help and sent up eighty men with water buckets litters stimulants in bottles bandages, oil, flour and soothing liniment and at the same time dispatched a messenger on horse back to Portland for surgeons and physicians Then I returned to the summit of Mount Tabor overtaking my reinforcement near the top of the hill

When we came to the region of the chute a strange sight met our view The chute and cables were gone The grass in the vicinity was all burnt off, the men I had left to care for the splintered bodies were prostrate and senseless and eighteen more bodies were piled in confusion at the point which had a few minutes before been the terminus of the great work

Nor could I see any evidence that such a work had ever existed save a blackened line like a broad ribbon extending from the summit of Mount Tabor over toward Hood

In a few moments we had our men resuscitated and able to explain what they could remember which was not much They said they were working over the body I had left in their charge when, hearing a loud rumbling on the chute and looking up, they saw a lot of these splintery logs projected upon the ground and were instantly blinded by a flash of lightning which knocked them senseless for they could remember nothing more till they saw me with the men dashing water over them.

Terrible as was the shock to my fortunes I felt that my first duty was to humanity and I set every force at work to save the beings so strangely thrown into our hand

I soon had a face uncovered Some part of the clothing had been so torn as to cover the head and only a few splinters had entered the flesh nor had the skin been much broken The eyes had met a remarkable escape and I felt if the whole body were as fortunate as the head we should be able to save the life of the man My fear was that so large a portion of the skin might be injured that its functional action would be fatally reduced

After a little the whole face was laid bare and we recognized Mr W G Iron an active member of the Alpine Club I divided the men among the different bodies and sent for more help and remedies Mr Iron was very weak but was not suffering the torture his outward appearance seemed to indicate The splinters were too small to much more than pierce the clothing and when the face hands and arms were released the patient was able to help himself a good deal and so expedite the process of extracting the splinters from the rest of his person

When Mr Iron had been quite cleared of timber and put into a suit of clothes we placed him on a litter and carried him to my quarters Under the influence of stimulants carefully administered by a physician, and the use of soothing lotions, this gentleman was able to give us the history of this strange occurrence, which is certainly without a parallel in my experience.

It appears that about noon on this day of opening everything was ready at Mount Hood to start the ice blocks down their channel Several had already gone forward, and no word had been received through the telephone. From this it will be seen that my suspicion stated above was correct. The immense cakes of ice in rushing down the wooden chute had generated an amount of electricity which melted the ice and surcharged the telephone wires, fusing the instrument and setting fire to the Mount Tabor office

All this was unknown at Mount Hood but the parties there could see the cake of ice dart smoothly down its channel and gradually disappear in the distance It never occurred to them that this disappearance was dissolution The spectacle of the motion was irresistibly fascinating and Mr W G Iron a young man of remarkable energy and grit resolved to try one of the blocks in a journey to Mount Tabor a proposition in which he was at once seconded by a fellow member of the club

Two hollows large enough for the passengers, were made on the top of an immense cake of ice 100 feet long 10 feet wide and 10 feet high and they started The velocity of the motion and the rapid development of electricity reduced them to unconsciousness and the rest is conjecture When the ice had melted they must have come directly upon the [illegible] of the chute and gathered up the [illegible] from [illegible] planed [illegible] of the [illegible] A continuance of the [illegible] the sending of several blocks in rapid succession generated the immense volume of electricity which [illegible] destroyed this very interesting work

Happily all the men have been saved which is certainly a source of great congratulation but they were engaged in an unwarranted [illegible] style of recreation They have destroyed our great ice chute and brought the company to ruin I have therefore commenced suits for damage [illegible] and I hope to realize a first dividend [illegible]

The timber of the chute and the steel in the cables were [illegible] for [illegible] go bonds of the world [illegible] under the circumstances go to force [illegible]

As to myself who [illegible] to this catastrophe I shall make every possible sacrifice to justice And to this end I have already taken steps to deliver to the company [illegible] house in Ma[illegible] which I had lately conveyed to [illegible] which is valued at $31,8[illegible] and 300 acres of swamp land in the beautiful [illegible] of Florida, the property of my late mother in law

With the few millions I am thus able to save out of the wreck of my hopes and fortune I shall retire to Peru where I may be free from the excited and unreasoning clamors of an ungenerous American mob and where the craven minions of tyrannical law cannot reach me

When I have had a few years of the rest my labors have earned [illegible] and there is no longer danger from the hounds of the law I shall return and start new enterprises in the hope of restoring my broken fortune with the success that has marked my predecessors in similar enterprises

All which is [illegible] and respectfully submitted to a [illegible] by

THE FEATHER WEIGHTS

Weir and Murphy Now Fighting in Indiana.

THEY ARE AFRAID OF EACH OTHER

The Spider Rushed the Slugging for the First Ten Rounds But Murphy was the Fresser at Last Accounts

CHICAGO March 30 A world's feather weight championship battle for $1500 and the Fox belt with only 100 spectators allowed was the attraction which to-night brought together at the Polk street depot here just that number of sports and newspaper men Every one of the 100 was full of eager conjecture as to the outcome of the event and the friends of the contestants were busily engaged in laying wagers before the train left the depot at 9 20 P M The aggregate of the wagers on the result was well up in the thousands and the indications pointed to heavy betting at the ring side Both Weir and Murphy were declared by their respective partisans to be in the pink of physical condition, while the rumors of personal ill feeling between the men enhanced the expectations of a gory fight to the finish

Parson Davies's smooth management of the expedition at the start was much commended

ON THE GROUND.

The Usual Incidents Preliminary to a Prize Fight

KOUTTS Ind March 30—The party arrived here about 12 30 A M and preparations for the fight are now being made Billy Myer of Streator who recently fought Jack McAuliffe to a draw at North Judson, Ind was selected as referee

The crowd was kept locked in the train until the hall which was located about three blocks from the railroad was all in readiness About a quarter of an hour was the length of the wait. Then the 100 spectators were marched through the darkness from the cars Everybody floundered through the mud and protected himself as best he could from the rain which was coming down pell mell

In the hall, which proved to be a good sized room over a store everything was cheery forming a welcome contrast to the dreariness outside

A ring was pitched and in a few minutes each of the hundred was ensconced in a comfortable chair

Weir and Murphy quickly stripped in the rear of the room, and, after being rubbed down came quickly forward It was just five minutes to 1 o'clock Sunday morning when the pair entered the ring It was announced that the seconds would be Ed McAvoy of Boston and Bill Richards for Weir and Mike Daly of Bangor, and Bill Daly of Boston for Murphy.

Weir's backer McAvoy offered to bet any part of a thousand dollars on Weir just before the fighting began There were no takers Small bets between outsiders averaging $20 apiece were being made, however all over the room Weir the "Belfast Spider," looked the more confident of the two fighters when they finally faced each other He wore bright green trunks while Murphy was attired in somber black Murphy seemed a trifle nervous

Billy Myer the referee evoked the first applause by announcing that the affair would be fought to a finish, if it took all night and all day Sunday

THE FIGHT

A Savage Beginning Degenerates Into a Walking Match

At 1 05 A M time was called The men sparred cautiously for a minute when Weir led but his blow was neatly stopped by Murphy who countered The Spider danced around in front of his antagonist swinging his long arms Suddenly he led and landed on Murphy's left eye, cutting a great gash below it First blood was claimed and allowed for Weir When the men came together, Weir again gave Murphy a frightful smash on the eye, which was now bleeding freely Again the Spider led and reaching Murphy again knocked him squarely down Five hundred to $200 was here offered by Weir's backers No takers After the ten seconds allowed for the knockdown had elapsed, the round closed without further damage

Heavy slugging marked the opening of the second round on both sides, Murphy coming to the scratch in evidently a wicked frame of mind His eagerness led him too far however and partly from a slip and partly from a blow in the chest, he went down A moment later he slipped again Now becoming more cautious but more resolved than ever, he began a long, clever, gamy struggle It was give and take till the close of the round

Both men had apparently an increased respect for the other's prowess at the opening of the fourth Each was covered with blood, which came mainly from Murphy's left eye and nose His eye was in an awful condition and Weir kept going for that organ while Murphy directed his blows at Weir's ribs Close-in fighting characterized the fourth round, in the first moments, during which Murphy got decidedly the worst of it Sparring for wind ensued, until just as the word time was called, there was a sharp exchange of blows, each man getting a jaw breaker.

Fifth round—The men came quickly to the scratch and the "Spider" at once led again Murphy was fighting gamely and got in a good cut on Weir's ribs but the Spider again swung his right and landed again on Murphy's damaged optic from which the blood was once more flowing in streams down Murphy's neck and chest and bespattered Weir as well The round closed without further fighting

When time was called for the sixth round, Murphy responded quickly and his eye had been stuck together anew with sticking plaster Murphy led but Weir danced out of his way and then with an under cut again reached Murphy's eye and scattered the sticking plaster and blood anew The round ended with light sparring

Seventh round—Weir led again but plucky Murphy was fighting well and stopped his blow and countered There were frequent clinches but the men obeyed the referee's cry of break away promptly Weir got in another smash on Murphy's eye before the round closed

Signs of exhaustion were visible in both men in the eighth Murphy's optic quickly got a fire hout from Weir's right but Murphy's solid stand was eliciting unbounded admiration from the crowd and he was not failing to get in his work on the Spider's ribs Weir now began a series of upper cuts with his left but apparently accomplished little by his new tactics except to make the struggle more showy It was noticeable that Weir for some reason let up on Murphy's right eye and turned his attention somewhat to body blows, imitating Murphy

In the ninth Murphy seemed to get the best of it. Weir was rather winded and Murphy got in three blows to Spider's" one but the Belfast man's long reach was sufficient to make the intervals between Murphy's successes too long to have an accumulative effect

Murphy seemed to be just warming up at the call for the tenth He was not as strong as he at first appeared however for Weir managed to run away repeatedly At the close Weir aimed a fearful backhander, but Murphy calmly turned his head an inch and escaped

In the eleventh Weir showed what he meant by attention to Murphy's left eye Spider [illegible] a stinger on Murphy's right eye and noticed with grim satisfaction that the left was completely closed Weir then danced around and drove Murphy to the ropes but the latter got in a good blow on the neck A series of mad rushes on each side with frequent clinches tells the story until the end of the fifteenth round after which the men were too weak to keep up such work and began the tame walk around

MURPHY THE FRESHER OF THE TWO

KOUTTS Ind March 31—Twenty nine rounds have been fought The last fifteen have been simply a walking match. Scarcely a blow was struck Murphy's eyes seem better Weir's ribs and arms show the effect of Murphy's cuts Murphy is now going for his ribs and altogether seems the fresher of the two

THE WALKING MATCH CONTINUES

3 15 A. M —Thirty one rounds now have been fought, and the walking match still continues.

"I can't run around like you," says Murphy "come and hit me"

"I'll lick you yet" answers the Spider.

The spectators are becoming impatient There is no betting going on

BETTING IN MURPHY'S FAVOR

4 1 A M—Up to the forty eighth round the walk around continued, when Weir's backer ordered him into the center of the ring and told him to fight but Weir seemed disinclined to follow his orders and continued to dance away In the next round Murphy continued to rush Weir and got several good blows in on his ribs Betting is $100 to $90 in favor of Murphy

JEM SMITH AND MITCHELL

They Are Matched to Fight for the Championship of England

NEW YORK March 30—Richard K Fox to-day received from George W Atkinson a cable to the effect that the backers of Jem Smith and Charley Mitchell met at the office of the Sporting Life to day and arranged the final preliminaries for their £500 glove fight and the championship of England The battle is to be decided next Monday night

LAUGHABLE BURLESQUE IN COURT

William Jones Denies Having Sworn in English and Claims He Can Talk Most Any Language When Mad

One of the most ludicrous cases in the police court for some time was the case of William Jones charged with using abusive language to Henry Magee tried before Judge Tanner yesterday afternoon

Mr Magee the complaining witness testified regarding the indecent and profane language used by the defendant to him in front of his store on Fourth street near Salmon His testimony was corroborated by several reliable witnesses who stated that the defendant could be heard over a block away and that the language used was decidedly profane.

Jones being placed on the stand in his own defense denied having used any abusive language to Magee "I could not have used that language" he said "for I spoke in French" The witness could not have understood me When I get mad I can talk French Spanish Italian and most every other language

"Can you swear in Irish?" asked the city attorney

Jones could not but to prove his knowledge of the French language he proceeded to talk as if he were giving testimony before a French magistrate He then gave several oaths in French but as no one could interpret it, no offense was taken He continued

"I heard that Magee made some remarks about Mrs. Brown insinuating that she was a disreputable woman When I heard that I went to him to get satisfaction I did not call him any names Mrs Brown's husband who lives in Astoria told me to take good care of her, and that if anyone abused her I should see to it and he would pay all damages"

The only other witness for Jones was Mrs J R Brown the woman whose battles he was under obligations to fight She also stated that Magee had made remarks about her and as for Jones using abusive language to Magee she did not think that Jones knew enough for that

"Yes Jones is a very good man," she said "He cleans out saloons and barber shops and works hard He has lived with us over six years and we never had any fault to find with him He has always protected me and my husband has told him that all costs would be paid by him if any were incurred while he (Jones) takes my part"

But she continued somewhat changing the tenor of the eulogy "Jones is a little simple He hasn't got good sense He is half crazy, you know Judge and ignorant"

Mrs Brown here rested, as did also Mr Jones's case

The court, after briefly reviewing the testimony found the defendant guilty and ordered him to pay a fine of $20

Quick as a flash Mrs Brown bolted up to the judge and produced the necessary coin "Here she said "I will pay this I have got the money for you I will send William (Jones) to the telegraph office at once to snatch my husband for more money He is at Astoria"

She then went down stairs and produced her subpena Handing it to Police Captain Grit macher she said "There's my specific spects I'm entitled to $1 in the second [illegible]" The captain explained to her that there was no money coming on that document and she left evidently much pleased with her experience in court She retained a jolly good humor throughout but had to pull Jones along almost by main force Jones wanted to tarry and have a set to with Magee

The case was so much out of the usual run of court proceedings that the spectators at times could scarcely retain their risibilities Even the court was obliged to yield to some of the most ludicrous situations

A good business was done last week The confidence that has been steadily growing in the public mind suffers no backset, and the belief that Portland will continue to increase in wealth population and commercial importance even in the minds of our most cautious capitalists is causing them to make investments in proportion, and to drop in a certain degree the practice of loaning on mortgages, which has been their policy for years, believing that the returns from rents and increased valuation of property will have a great advantage over the latter plan

The building trade has never been so active as at present and competent mechanics, in all branches find full employment at fair wages The outlook in building circles is that we are going to have more and better buildings constructed this year than has been known in many years

A PETRIFIED WHALE VERTEBRA.—Deputy U S Marshal W W Roberts has a remarkable specimen of petrifaction in his office in the postoffice building The petrifaction was picked up by him on the beach at Yaquina bay, and is supposed to be a vertebra of a whale. The shape is nearly an exact counterpart of a vertebra, and there is no reason to believe that it is anything else The petrifaction weighs about six pounds, and makes a very handy paper weight, for which purpose it is used in the office

THEY HAD DRIFTED TO NESTUCCA

And Wandered From Exposure Hunger and Thirst—The Captain Censured for Abandoning His Vessel

YAQUINA Or March 30—Messrs Bowers Hastings and Hardisty whom your correspondent reported as having reached Cape Foulweather in the schooner George H Chance on the 28th arrived here yesterday not much the worse for their experience among the breakers They then stated the night the schooner after the breaking of the rudder had gradually drifted and sailed up the coast until Sea rock were reached when the rudder became entirely disabled and all control of the vessel was lost and she came within a trace of going on the rock

Reaching the mouth of the Yaquina the usual signal of distress were made and seeing no evidence of help reaching them from this bay the boats were lowered about 6 o'clock P M All the men embarked the intention being for Bowers Hastings and Hardisty to come in and secure help while the dory containing the captain and the other two men was to return to the schooner which lay anchored just off the outside buoy at the mouth of this bay

Approaching the beach the skiff containing Bowers and the two other men was caught in the breakers upset and cast among the rocks but the three men succeeded in reaching shore all on weather

The men in the dory seeing the fate of the skiff and believing the three men lost put back to sea and the wind [illegible] they were compelled to pull out to sea to save themselves

The greatest anxiety prevailed in regard to the dory and her men and the tug [illegible] Captain Richards was ordered to go to sea at once and cruise as far north as the mouth of the Columbia if necessary in search of them In pursuance of this duty yesterday afternoon about 5 o'clock Captain Richards discovered the dory and crew about one and a half miles south of Nestucca some twenty five miles north of Yaquina bay and took the boat and men on board

The tug returning reached the mouth of the bay about 7 o'clock this evening too late to cross in When she reached her dock at Yaquina City this morning and the three missing men were descried on the deck of the tug the wildest cheers were indulged in by the large throng of anxious spectators on the dock and three hundred tailors never received a more warm and hearty welcome home

THEY WERE NEARLY FAMISHED

ALBANY March 30—News received from Yaquina that this morning the tug returned from the search for Captain Robinson and the three men lost from the schooner George H Chance having found them in a perilous situation near Nestucca bay about thirty miles north of Yaquina where they had drifted in a small boat Their boat was filled with water and they were nearly perished They had been out two days without food They were welcomed back by their friends at Yaquina who had given them up as lost Captain Robinson's family who reside at Newport were overjoyed at this safe return

The men who rescued the schooner have [illegible] and the loss will fall upon the Deep Sea Fishing Company

THE [illegible]

Captain [illegible] of the tug [illegible] makes the following report

We proceeded to sea yesterday at 12 30 P M in search of the missing crew of the abandoned schooner Geo H Chance and succeeded in finding them about one and one half miles south of the entrance of Nestucca and about one mile off shore, at 3 30 P M They were in a fishing dory and all [illegible] oars but used paddles The men were still hard, [illegible] from [illegible] and had suffered so [illegible] Captain Robinson volunteered and acted as coast [illegible] did not consider it prudent to cross in last night on account of low water

The [illegible] there is [illegible] at the time of the loss of the former Yaquina City on Yaquina bar in December 1887 It is the opinion of mariners that with the cargo of lumber that he had on board at the time a rudder could easily have been improvised The only damage that the schooner sustained was the loss of her rudder but as she was abandoned it is supposed that under the marine laws she is properly classed as wreck and that her rescuers can demand salvage

The Chance was loaded with cordwood and lumber She was insured for $8000, the vessel was valued at $12 000 the cost of building was between $[illegible] 000 and $8000 The George H Chance originally belonged to William T Rader who was one of the first projectors of the Deep Sea Fishing Company recently incorporated Subsequently the vessel became the property of the company It is very probable that the board of underwriters will make all necessary repairs to the schooner and not pay the insurance

"Oh yes the Southern Pacific stock," said Huntington [illegible] "I have a little statement prepared Take one" and he handed the reporter a neat typewritten copy of the following

March 29 1889

The Southern Pacific Company increases its capital stock from one hundred million to one hundred and fifty million dollars, which additional fifty million is to be issued from time to time, as needed, in exchange for shares of other railroad companies All holders of stock of the roads that we have built in the last five years in connection with the Southern Pacific will have the option and can exchange, if they so elect, by giving ten shares of their present holdings for six of the Southern Pacific Company, and those holding shares of the Northern railway and its branches can exchange if they so elect share for share.

Then Huntington said the general outlook of the country was good and that the railroads were doing well "We hardly got a new dollar for an old one last year" he said "that's the [illegible] to leave but I am not inclined to worry

ACCORDING TO A PARAgraph in the American Cultivator of Boston, Consumption is gradually decreasing in New England. This is a gratifying fact, and much of the credit of this condition of things is due to the extraordinary popularity in the past 50 years in New England of Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup. To this wonderful remedy more than all others combined is due the credit of decreasing the ravages of Consumption.

THE DAY'S JUDICIAL WORK.

The Motion Overruled—Chee Gong Will Be Sentenced to Death.

Pleaded Not Guilty—Wants Her Clerkship—Matrimonial Candidates—Appointed Administrator—Estate Appraised

Judge Stearns yesterday denied the motion for a new trial for Chee Gong the convicted murderer and ordered him to appear to-morrow morning to be sentenced to death. Seven of the jurymen before whom the case was tried filed an affidavit, denying the charges of misconduct and irregularity in their proceedings made by the attorney for Chee Gong.

Charles S. Perkins, indicted for feloniously assaulting Gertie Kopper, pleaded not guilty and will be tried April 16.

The demurrer to the indictment of Albert J. Cody for mayhem will be decided to-morrow morning.

MISS BOGGS WANTS HER CLERKSHIP

Miss Bertie Boggs applied to the state circuit court yesterday to oust Theodore W. Bleick from the clerkship of school district No. [illegible], Albina. She alleges that she received a majority of the votes cast at the March election, while Bleick maintains that he is the people's choice for the place.

MISCELLANEOUS COURT NOTES.

Marriage licenses were granted yesterday for J. A. Lindsay and Marion Holmes, John F. Smith and Mrs. Ellen Connell, John E. Olsen and Marie Peterson.

C. A. Gove was yesterday appointed administrator of the estate of Charles C. Snook, which is worth $4000.

The estate of the late J. M. Stott has been appraised at $4,[illegible].

POLICE COURT

John Barry was taxed $10 for taking the liberty of getting gloriously drunk and taking a nap on the public streets. Officer Morgan picked him up in North Portland, where he was found lying across the sidewalk in a drunken slumber.

F. Weise, a self-confessed vagrant, was given twenty days in the city jail.

The case against Mrs. Davenport, charged with using abusive language to T. P. Wood, was continued two weeks to suit the convenience of the defendant's attorney.

RECEIVED STOLEN GOODS

Justice Tuttle yesterday issued a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. F. Wise on a charge of receiving stolen goods. Recently the tool chests of John H. Fagan and A. G. Shephard, carpenters, were broken open and from the former $9 worth of tools were taken, while the latter was relieved of $[illegible] worth. The tools were found in Mrs. Wise's second hand store, where they had been disposed of by the thief.

DISHONEST TICKET SCALPER.

One George Gilbert was arrested by Constable Simmons yesterday on complaint of C. W. Wegstein on a charge of larceny by bailee. The plaintiff claims that he was approached by Gilbert in the St. Charles hotel and asked if he was a traveling man. On receiving a reply in the affirmative, the alleged scalper asked him to purchase a railroad ticket of him, promising him one at greatly reduced rates. Wegstein says he told the man he had a steerage steamship ticket for San Francisco to this destination. Gilbert induced Wegstein to place the steamship ticket in his hands to sell, promising to get $4 or $5 for it.

Wegstein confided in Gilbert, but his confidence was misplaced, as the scalper neither returned the ticket or gave his victim any consideration for it. Gilbert claims that he sold the ticket to Allen & Ewart for $1.

As this is not the first case of the kind, Justice Tuttle has made up his mind to break the practice up. He found Gilbert guilty, and fined him $[illegible], in default of which he was sent to jail.

REFUSES TO BE EJECTED

Recently W. J. Humphrey, administrator of the estate of W. J. Humphrey, began suit of forcible entry and detainer against Henry Isensee for the possession of two acres of land on the outskirts of town. The plaintiff was awarded judgment by default Friday morning. Constable Simmons went out to the place in question and evicted Isensee, but the latter immediately took possession of the place again. Yesterday M. C. George, attorney for Mr. Humphrey, applied for a bench warrant for the arrest of Isensee on a charge of contempt of court in not vacating the premises when so ordered.

It seems that Isensee is crazy and imagines that the property in question is his. He has erected a cabin on the property, the sides of which are filled with port holes. He says that if an attempt is made to deprive him of his property again he will defend it with his life. As soon as arrested he will probably be examined to determine his sanity.

THE RING AND THE "MITS"

Patsy Cardiff Departs for San Francisco—Tom Cleary Challenges Tom Ward—Statutory Prohibition

Patsy Cardiff, the pugilist, left for San Francisco yesterday afternoon to go into training for his glove fight with Peter Jackson, the Australian champion, which will take place April [illegible] at the California Athletic club.

"Patsy is going to strive hard to win this fight," said W. E. Gooding, Cardiff's manager, to a reporter yesterday. "We do not underrate Jackson a particle. He is undoubtedly a good man, and if he succeeds in whipping Patsy he will be good enough to fight the best of them."

Mr. Gooding said further that Patsy's exhibitions in Portland and en route here had netted him $6500. Then he entered upon a discussion of the merits of different pugilists.

"As I said before," he continued, "Jackson is a good man, but I don't know what kind of a fight he would make with Sullivan, because he has fought no one in this country but Godfrey and McAuliffe, and the latter was a greatly overrated man. Cardiff fought six rounds with Sullivan, and but for the referee, who stood in with John L., he would have won, as he clearly had the best of it."

"What do you think of the coming Sullivan-Kilrain fight?"

"I think it will never come off. Sullivan has seen his best day, and the way he is going on it looks to me as if he did not care to meet Kilrain."

"Who in your estimation is the best man in America to-day?"

"Kilrain is at the top of the heap. He is an underrated man. If Sullivan ever meets Kilrain it will be the first time in his long career in the ring that he ever met a clever man, and while he may win according to Queensberry rules he would not have any ne[illegible] of [illegible] under the London prize ring rules. Sullivan under Queensberry rules can do [illegible] one thing—hard hitting. He is neither a general nor a wrestler, neither is he so strong as Kilrain, who is a hard hitter, a good general, a clever boxer and a game man. Dempsey is the greatest fighter for his weight that ever lived. He is a greater wonder than Sullivan, and if he weighed fifteen pounds more he would be the champion of the world. He is no 'kid glove' fighter, but a finished fighter, depending on hitting his man and getting away to win his battles."

CLEARY CHALLENGES WARD

Tom Ward, who has been anxious for some time, as he claims, to meet Tom Cleary, of Seattle, [illegible] from the latter, which is as follows:

[illegible] W. T., March [illegible], 1889.

Tom W[illegible]: [illegible] time[illegible] unstopped [illegible]. If you want fight I will [illegible] I will fight you to a finish with small gloves for $500 a side and gate receipts, Queensberry rules, within 150 miles of Portland, within six weeks from signing articles. I will place $100 as a forfeit with any reputable Portland business man to cover my contract. Make any terms and I will [illegible] so long as they comply with the above. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain yours, etc.,

TOM CLEARY.

Ward called at this office last evening and stated that he is only too willing to accommodate Cleary, and that he will cover his forfeit money as soon as it is put up. He further says that he is in good condition and will fight to win.

WHAT HILL'S CODE SAYS

The appended, which is section 1869 of Hill's Annotated Laws of Oregon, says regarding prize-fighting:

Any person or persons arranging, or attempting to arrange or offering to arrange or engaging, or offering to engage in a prize fight to be fought within the limits of this state, or otherwise, in any manner, either as principal, second, assistant, stakeholder, trainer, referee, aider, abettor, solicitor or agent, whether said fight shall take place or not, shall, upon conviction thereof, be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than five years or by fine of no less than $1000 nor more than $5000.

It shall be the duty of every peace officer and justice of the peace to see that this act shall be enforced, and when any of said officers have reason to believe that this act is being violated it shall be their duty to institute proceedings against any party so suspected. It shall also be the duty of every circuit judge, on charging any grand jury, to read this act to said grand jury, and it shall be the duty of said grand jury to diligently inquire after any violations of the provisions of this act.

Under the above statute the duties of the officers of the law in this state are plain. They cannot, without violating their official oaths, permit this proposed fight to take place, nor can they fail to take note of the violation of the law which has already occurred in the offering of Cleary and the acceptance of Ward to engage in a fight. The grand jury is now in session, and Circuit Judge Stearns's duty under the statute is to inform them of its provisions, after which their duty is clearly defined.

PORTLAND AND VICINITY.

CARPENTERS SCARCE.—Building has commenced in Feurer's addition, and were it not for the scarcity of carpenters, the activity in this new addition would be astonishing. The lots have not been quite four weeks on the market and, although they were advertised only on a very limited scale, they sell quite readily and 103 lots have been sold already. This is something marvelous and speaks for itself that the location must be very desirable and the price indeed moderate. The agent, Mr. Leopold Dietz, will be on the grounds every Sunday from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. in any kind of weather. For parties on this side of the river desiring to visit Feurer's addition it is best to take the street car on Morrison street bridge to the south terminus on Fifth street, from where it is only seven minutes walk. Carpenters wanting work are requested to call at the office of the German Immigration Association, No. 25 Stark street.

AN OLD ENGINEER GONE.—The funeral yesterday of William Doran was largely attended by the old residents both of this city and The Dalles. In 185[illegible] William Doran was employed as fireman on the old steamship Columbia between this city and San Francisco. In 1861 he went on the middle Columbia in the employ of Captain J. C. Ainsworth and Colonel Ruckles, and has been chief engineer on this route almost continuously ever since. His hand held the throttle of the R. R. Thompson, as well as nearly all the boats brought over the Cascades. He was loved by all his associates, and when a subscription was suggested for any purpose, William Doran liberally headed the list.

THE BOY DID NOT TARRY.—About 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon a police whistle blown by the medicine fakir on Alder street, near First, was the means of calling together a large crowd in a remarkably short period of time. A small boy had given "back talk" while the man was endeavoring to elucidate some knotty problem in medical science. The boy persisted in mocking the man. The man waxed wroth. He blew the whistle and the little boy scampered down First street with the speed of a reindeer and was soon lost in the crowd of pedestrians. By the time an officer arrived, the medicine man had again resumed his discourse and peace reigned supreme.

BATH HOUSE FUND GROWING.—The free bath house fund is growing from day to day and over $500 is already subscribed. Among the latest contributors to this most worthy project are Simon Harris, Gerald Robinson, Harry Loyd and Rev. T. L. Eliot. The financial committee have not been out collecting during the past few days, owing to other work each had on hand. All called upon so far have been very liberal and it is thought that the necessary $1500 required to start the building will be obtained without any trouble.

CHILDREN COULD NOT ACCEPT.—Owing to the fact that there are several cases of scarlet fever at the Children's Home, the little people could not accept the invitation of the Ben Cotton Company to attend the matinee yesterday afternoon. As much as they regretted to be obliged to forego this pleasure, they themselves saw the need of it and the danger of exposing others if they had gone. Mr. Hughes, of the L. C. & B. T. Co., very kindly had a bus in readiness, but it was not required.

FIVE MINUTES EASY DRIVE along Vancouver avenue after passing the popular Maegly Highlands, brings you to Saratoga, the latest and loveliest addition on the East Side. The Empire Land Company, 74 Morrison street, are creating a sensation in offering lots in this garden spot at from $200 to $250, or from 80 to 50 per cent. cheaper than lots in other similarly located additions. These absurd prices cannot long prevail. Be wise, therefore, and grasp your opportunity at once.

BUILDING PERMITS GRANTED.—Building permits were yesterday granted to S. W. Yocum for a two story double tenement house on Eighth and Harrison streets at an estimated cost of $4000, and to S. E. Deadman for a dwelling on Oak and East Park streets, at an estimated cost of $1000.

NEW INCORPORATIONS.—Articles incorporating the Washington County Land Improvement Company and the West Hights Real Estate Company were filed yesterday by R. McDonald, Ed Wilcox and J. C. Harris. The capital of the former is fixed at $5000 and of the latter at $11,000.

OVERHEARD.—"How big vas Highland und Maegly Highland, shon dot beobles talk so much aboud? Vas it so big as Sharmany und de gountry all abound?" "Oh, no, mine dear. It vas not its size, alldo it is no midg. Its pound as big as forty plocks und is better as Couch ridge."

A PHENOMENAL SUCCESS.—The immense crowd which poured in Kohn's stores for $1 90 stiff hats Saturday was a sight worth seeing, and all went away pleased with $3 00 hats for $1 90. The sale will be continued for Monday only at the corner of Second and Morrison streets.

FUNERAL OF MRS. AUSTIN.—Mrs. W. H. Austin, a daughter of Jake Grazier of Yamhill county, died at her home, 191 Mill street, of paralysis Friday night, aged 24 years. The funeral took place yesterday morning and the remains were interred in Lone Fir cemetery.

DAVIES, the photographer, would call your attention to his new exhibit of photographs at the gallery, corner First and Taylor. Having improved his facilities and engaged a new retoucher, he is prepared to turn out the finest work ever seen on the Pacific coast.

FISH OIL PLANT SOLD.—The wharves, boats, nets, steam tug and fish oil plant of the Northwest Trading Company at Killisnoo, Alaska, was yesterday sold by D. P. Thompson, W. M. Ladd and E. Koehler, the trustees, to Carl Spuhn, of Killisnoo, for $25,000.

ON A VISIT.—Mr. Walter Mackay, a prominent citizen of Butte, Montana, has been in the city for several days past visiting his brother, Mr. Donald Mackay. He left last night for Walla Walla to visit another brother there on his way home.

PLEASANT NEWS FOR PORTLANDERS.—Miss Edith Miller, the accomplished dressmaker, has accepted a position at the model dressmaking establishment of Mellis & Co.'s, where she hereafter will be pleased to meet her many friends.

ALL THE WORLD PAYS TRIBUTE to Arthur Kohn's merchant tailoring department. Here are cloths from every clime, imported and domestic, and suits are turned out at short notice and warranted to fit, at corner Second and Morrison streets.

HALF PRICE.—Ben and Idalene Cotton will give an extra and their last performance at the New Park theater to-night, when the admission will be only 25 and 50 cents. They will produce their great domestic drama, The Old Home.

NEW ADDITION.—Attention is directed to the adv't of Carr & Goldsmith in "New To-day" column concerning their new addition of C. & G. Park, which is platted in two-acre tracts and sold at $260 per acre on easy terms.

THE MANZANITA AGAIN O. K.—The lighthouse tender Manzanita was laid up at Astoria for slight repairs to her propeller Friday night, but yesterday morning was again on duty. The damage was but slight.

TO THE PUBLIC.—I have been making gold crowns for the past twenty years, antedating all patents thereon, and will continue to supply customers with them on application.—J. C. Jessup.

WALLACE'S fine strain of English, German and French pansies $1 per hundred. Set of premium chrysanthemums, 75 cents per dozen. Rosedale Nursery, Nineteenth and O streets.

CONTRACT LET.—The contract for building the cable railway engine house was let yesterday to J. E. Bennett. The work of excavation will be commenced to-morrow morning.

MISSES HARKINS & CARR display in their parlors this week the latest craze in the English riding hat. Also the latest novelty in a dress hat, the H. & C., their own importation.

ADDITION TO SUNNYSIDE.—See ad. of H. D. McGuire & Co., under "New To-day." They say there are no set[illegible] birds out there, but it is a good place to build a house.

WHAT CAN [illegible]. Take it to Kohn's at [illegible] boys' suit sizes for 4 to 12 year boys, at corner Second and Morrison streets.

THE PORTLAND & VANCOUVER RAILWAY COMPANY will run trains to-day every 45 minutes between [illegible] and 6:30 P. M. Trains in the morning leave as usual.

ANOTHER NEW TOWN.—The plat of Saratoga, which lies just east of Albina, was filed yesterday by H. G. Wortman.

OPEN UNTIL 5 O'CLOCK after April 1. P. E. Brigham, [illegible] First street, Abington block.

BEDDING plants remarkably cheap at Burkhardt Bros., Twenty-second and G.

WHERE TO DINE TO-DAY

Freimann, the well known caterer, sets a specially fine Sunday dinner to-day. It will include, as usual, all the delicacies of the season.

For an elegant dinner to-day, patronize Simon's restaurant, 22 Stark.

A fine Sunday dinner is served to-day at the International hotel from 12 to 1:30. This is said to be the best 25-cent dinner in the city.

The well known U. S. restaurant, 20 Morrison, sets the usual fine Sunday dinner to-day from 11 A. M. to 7 P. M. Eat there once.

The Louisville restaurant, 170 First, is one of the most popular restaurants in the city. You should try one of their famous Sunday dinners.

Dinner's [illegible] Pine street coffee house serves the premium [illegible] tenderloin fillets and the finest chickens on Sunday for dinner.

Be sure to try one of the fine chicken dinners to-day at [illegible] First street. He serves the finest coffee and chocolate.

It is useless to go by the St. George in search of a good Sunday dinner. A most elaborate Sunday chicken dinner served to-day.

PORT TOWNSEND

BEN S. MILLER H. L. BURKETT.

MILLER & BURKETT,

REAL ESTATE BROKERS,

No. 8 Taylor St., Port Townsend, Washington.

The city of Port Townsend is situate on INCOMPARABLY THE FINEST HARBOR in the world. It is the port of entry for Puget Sound, whose ocean shipping in 1888 was 2,924,[illegible] TONS. The Port Townsend Southern Railway, which will give the city INDEPENDENT CONNECTION WITH TWO TRANSCONTINENTAL LINES at Portland, Oregon, is in course of construction. A STEAM MOTOR LINE to circumscribe the city, will be in operation about the middle of May. The Gloucester Fishing Company have established their headquarters here and within one year will have from 100 TO 200 SCHOONERS engaged in the HALIBUT INDUSTRY. Port Townsend has the only IRON FURNACE on Puget Sound. A CUSTOM HOUSE COSTING $240,000 will be built during the year. Brick and stone BUSINESS BLOCKS, costing in the aggregate $[illegible],000, are under construction. The POPULATION HAS DOUBLED within the past eighteen months and it is reasonable to expect that Port Townsend will have 15,000 PEOPLE when the census of 1890 is taken. Puget Sound for the coming summer will have an immigration of 1000 persons a day.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY PROPERTY VALUES ARE STILL LOW.

We have choice business, residence and acreage properties. Orders by mail will have as prompt and as careful attention as personal applications. No one has bought property through our agency within the past year but has at least doubled his money—some have trebled, some quadruple!

No city on the Pacific coast offers so good a field for safe investment and large returns as Port Townsend does to-day.

Correspondence solicited.

The Meeting of the East Portland Y. M. C. A. Last Evening.

No Place Like Oregon—Very Pleasant Party—Fined—More Houses Being Built—Wants a Daily Mail—Etc.

A very pleasant meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms Friday night. The rooms were filled to overflowing with ladies and gentlemen. Many improvements have been made to the rooms in the way of papering and frescoing, new furniture and books, until they are attractive and comfortable. The general secretary submitted his report for the quarter ending March 30.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT—RECEIPTS.

Balance	$ 40 00

BILLS PAYABLE.

Rent	$ 70 00
Secretary's salary	4 00
Printing	12 50
Total	$1[illegible] 50

There is on hand $40 cash and subscriptions due $8, a total $1[illegible]. The average income per month is $46. The total attendance evening and daily for the quarter was [illegible]. In the reading room the daily attendance since February 1 was [illegible], total 262. Bible reading and prayer meeting attendance, total 41. Sabbath afternoon attendance [illegible] total, 280. Receptions, socials and lectures (four), total, 301. Books added to the library, 60.

The association has made arrangements for a course of lectures. One has already been given by Rev. J. D. Driver, and the next will be given by Rev. H. V. Rominger next Wednesday night on the subject of Henry Ward Beecher. The association is growing and should be well sustained by the citizens of East Portland.

PLEASANT SOCIAL

A very pleasant social was given Friday night at the residence of Mr. [illegible] Sutton on Columbia street. Among the very pleasant things that occurred during the evening was the presentation of two handsome presents to [illegible] wife. The lady was taken completely by surprise. As might be expected the affair was full of life and interest, as the Columbia slough people are the kind who don't do things by halves.

[illegible]

Mr. H. [illegible], an old resident of East Portland, has just arrived from Denver. His family are now in California, where they went some time ago. Mr. Burrett reports that in all his wanderings he has found no place so fresh and green looking as Oregon. He will remain here about two weeks. Lots around Denver only 25x130, in the sand, are sold at a much larger figure than around East Portland.

FINED SEVEN DOLLARS.

Morris Lewis was arrested and fined yesterday $7 in the recorder's court for an offense that stamps him as a despicable fellow. His action would indicate that he is an insane man. The individual incarcerated in the city jail several days ago for being drunk and who has been in a state bordering on delirium tremens was sent to a Portland hospital yesterday. He was in a bad condition.

WANT A DAILY MAIL

A petition is being circulated for a daily mail between East Portland and Carrersville. It takes almost as much time to get a letter at any point along this route as it does to send to Chicago. As the country east of this place is rapidly building up, the people are entitled to daily mails.

NEW HOUSES

Mr. Aligrant, of Stephens addition, is arranging to build five cottages on the block on Third and U streets. He states that he will commence building at once. The outlook for a large number of houses is good.

PERSONAL AND GENERAL

Mr. E. A. House, of Sellwood, is at Spokane Falls and will be absent about two weeks.

Douglass and Frank Keenan have returned from Southern California and will remain here.

J. C. McGrew and wife will leave for the East on the 5th of April, to be gone several weeks.

Miss Lizzie Lesing, after a three weeks visit with her brothers, J. J. and J. F. Lesing, left for San Francisco Friday night.

The memorial services of the late Mrs. J. C. Mendenhall will take place to-day in the M. E. church during the usual Sunday school hour.

The Misses Eva and Lizzie Grounds, of Astoria, have been spending the week with Mrs. F. J. Thompson, visiting relatives and friends in Portland and East Portland. They will return home Monday.

Rev. J. D. Driver will deliver his farewell discourse in the Methodist church to-day. He has been pastor of the M. E. church for the past two and one half years and has resigned to become subscription agent of the Portland hospital. He is a preacher of great logical power.

If you covet appetite, flesh, color, vigor, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Sold by druggists.

CORDRAY'S ELECTRIC CLOCK

An Exhibition of Mechanical Ingenuity and Other Interesting Features

An entertainment of an unusually high standard of excellence arrived in town last day and will be opened to the public Tuesday evening at 1[illegible] First street. It is one of the [illegible] which ladies and children can attend, being entirely free from objectionable features and of a character of absorbing interest. At the same time it contains features instructive as well as interesting. It is called Cordray's Electric Clock Exhibition, and its proprietor furnishes the following description of it.

The clock [illegible] stands [illegible] feet high and [illegible]. The [illegible]. The mo[illegible] fea[illegible] most interesting feature [illegible] fully described [illegible] a lecture every [illegible] minutes.

At the chime of the first quarter a miniature locomotive engine runs round the track. At the second quarter a pretty bud gradually opens and discloses the god of love fully equipped for victory, then slowly closes again. At the third quarter a procession of the twelve disciples of Christ pass in view before their master, all with the exception of Judas bowing to him, in imitation of the Strasburg cathedral clock. At the last quarter Uncle Sam and fair Columbia walk round to remind one that enemies may go and love may come, traitors may betray, but Uncle Sam will be the last on deck. Its astronomical arrangements are numerous and instructive.

Other interesting features of the exhibition are the Floating Head, which is a skillful natural illusion that puzzles all who see it to account for it; [illegible] glass [illegible] who produce all forms of [illegible] and [illegible] objects which [illegible] which fascinate [illegible] and [illegible] entertainment which contains [illegible] of interest to all [illegible] as clear as the [illegible] most of the celebrated [illegible] or by deeds of [illegible] masterworks of art in the [illegible] people [illegible].

The [illegible] and will certainly be a [illegible] attraction during [illegible] stantly [illegible] necessary to take in the many objects of interest to the [illegible]. The exhibition has been several years on the road and has drawn large crowds wherever it has appeared.
